And he affirms that that must be forthcoming at once. That one thing—a trite word now—is "confidence." Yes; that is all we lack. But where is this confidence to come from? Have we really got to wait for it until every social reform has been achieved?

The President said that we are convalescing. Perhaps we are slightly convalescent, for nature is always at work; but it would be rather difficult to establish that fact through the testimony of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and other equally observant students of the times. We may be on the road to recovery from our national ills, but we are now told that this is the time to probe still deeper for the cause and that we should not wait until the patient has been cured. Why will the President, in whom we have vested this vast authority, not speak the words needed for a swift return of confidence? General Johnson is urging him to do it; the business world is urging him.

Every 2 years we have to go to our constituents with an accounting of what we have done in Washington and are dependent upon their approval for our return to office. Shall we have to continue to evade the real issues and tell them that we have delegated our authority to the President, who has in turn delegated it to the heads of the many bureaus, such as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation? Of course, you can tell your people to lay all the blame for failures on the President, if you still wish to do so. But now even the Supreme Court has spoken and admonished us.

Congressmen, get back on your job; shape your own policies.

Do not any longer make the people believe that there is only one man in the country who has the ability and the heart to act for their true, best interests. Gentlemen, let us get back to our appointed task now. As one of the Members on this side of the House, I desire to vote with you for real recovery measures. Above all things else, we need a restoration of confidence. I want the processing tax repealed, for one thing. It is not that we of New England, for example, are unwilling to give financial assistance to the sunny South—that beautiful sunny South, with its thousands and thousands of acres where God made it possible for the people to raise all the cotton desired. But now it appears that they wish to sell that cotton abroad for as high a price as possible, buy back as cheap goods as they can, and forget about the rest of the country. In the old days we on the sand and rocks of New England toiled hard or sailed the Seven Seas, saved a little money by frugality and prudence, investing it as capital in manufacturing plants which supplied a market for your raw products. With the imposing of the processing tax our manufacturers were told that the consumers who bought the finished cotton goods would be the ones to pay it in the end, but now the cotton manufacturers say that the consumers do not buy enough goods so that they can get out even because of the increased prices, due to that tax primarily. This curtailment in purchasing has hurt them seriously.

General Johnson said:

> My N. R. A. failed utterly because they fixed prices and made them higher at a time when the people could not pay them.

Some plants I know of did make money under the N. R. A., but merely because they positively fixed high prices and took a profit on a much decreased volume of business. Is that the result desired?

The people of the Nation really do pay this processing tax, of course—when they are able to buy. Take one item, overalls. We in New England are not now selling as many as formerly. Are they not wearing them in the South any more? Have they found something to take their place in the manner that paper bags have displaced cotton bags for wheat, now that the latter have been found reasonably durable and so much less expensive?

Have you not learned that there is a point beyond which we cannot go? How can the customer be forced to buy at advanced prices or refrain from using cheaper substitutes?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. A man prominent in business told me this story with regard to cotton: Cotton was selling at from 5 to 6 cents a pound. We went off the gold standard, and it jumped to 11. Being an exportable article, it was one of the commodities the price of which rose at that time; but other things did not go up correspondingly, and the President was obliged to acknowledge that what he believed would happen with the abandoning of the gold standard and fixing of the dollar's price at 59 cents had not occurred. The scheme had proven a dismal failure in that respect. Then along came the processing tax, and the price of cotton rose another 5 cents, making it 16 cents to the consumer. The N. R. A. came along and put it up still another 5 cents, so that now the consumer was forced to pay 21 cents instead of the 5 or 6 he had previously paid. It is natural that the textile manufacturers became discouraged.

Mr. Chairman, as the days pass and all these problems present themselves anew, I wish to be helpful, if possible. I trust that some of the criticisms which I have made today may also be regarded as constructive suggestion, in effect. I ask you to consider General Johnson's recent statement and see if you do not agree with him in your hearts. I endorse much of what he says. I endorse the suggestions contained in the Georgia State convention platform, as I know many of you do, although you may not dare to say so. If they feel like that in that State, it is safe to say that adjacent sections of the country feel the same. I shall try not to be too "political", Mr. Chairman, but I shall expect to give voice to my own convictions in these matters. If I were in a private business which had been sick but was beginning to pick up a little, and I found myself faced with a huge new indebtedness, it would not tend to hasten my recovery. It may be that an ailing nation will feel the same about it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I think that contemporary historians will recall the fact that a great evangelist who emanated from my own fair State of Ohio coined this phrase: "It is the hit dog that yelps the loudest."

It may be strange to some of you, but not to one who has followed farm legislation for the past 12 years—and, I repeat, it may be strange to some of you—to hear these vehement and somewhat violent protestations against the so-called "iniquities" of the processing tax by gentlemen who represent the great industrial East. I call the attention of the Members to the fact that for 12 long years the farmer of this great country of ours was the underdog; that for 12 long years the farmer had his nose to the grindstone; and that for 12 long years he suffered most acutely and keenly because of the discrimination against the American farmer by certain sections of the industrial East.

I remind the gentlemen on this side and do not wish to call up painful recollections upon the part of those on the other side, that these superopponents of the American farmer were led by that high priest of the American bankers, so well personified, typified, and represented by the greatest Secretary of the Treasury (?) since Alexander Hamilton, the Honorable Andrew Mellon. I remind the older Members that in 1926 and 1927 this body and the body on the other side of the Capitol twice passed the bill known as the "McNary-Haugen bill", when your great Agricultural Committees were headed by one of the great agricultural leaders of the West, Mr. Haugen, and by the Senator from the Northwest [Mr. MCNARY]. When this body twice passed that bill and enacted it into law, Mr. Mellon was the power behind the throne that caused the bill to be twice vetoed by the late Calvin Coolidge; and upon the veto of that most meritorious legislation began the real downfall of this country, a downfall that spelled doom and disaster for every citizen in this land, a downfall or a side slip, if you please, that ended only when the great mass of citizens of this country went to the polls in 1932 and elected a man to the Presidency who had fought for the common people instead of for the vested interests of this country. He looked upon this appalling chaos that had been brought about, when all of the farmers of the country were prostrate, when they were being foreclosed and losing their farms at the rate of 3,000 every time the sun rose and set, and it was then that this great leader of our party, this great leader of the common people of this country, recommended to the Congress that they pass the agricultural bill which embraces the well-known processing tax.

The speech of the first gentleman from Massachusetts, in which he gave you the amount of fees collected and the amount returned to various States, is the most convincing argument for the continuation of this processing tax that I have heard made on the floor of this House. It demonstrates to you and it demonstrates to the country at large that at last these superindustrial States of the East, which for 12 long years have opposed and blocked beneficial legislation, have been conquered and all the claims that we made for this bill have been proven. It shows that at last the consumers of these various sections mentioned—and call it sectional if you will—are forced to pay a fair price for the farmers' products. They are paying the price now and they have elevated the price of hogs $2.50 per 100 pounds more than when Hoover retired as President. The processing tax today has elevated the price of hogs almost nearly as much as the entire amount we were receiving for hogs under the previous administration and the previous form of government.

I am sorry to relate, Mr. Chairman, that thousands of farmers were foreclosed. It pains me to relate that thousands of home owners are about to be foreclosed unless relief, and speedy relief, is given these worthy people. I am informed that in one county, the county of Cuyahoga, the county seat of which is the city of Cleveland, there will be approximately 15,000 home owners foreclosed within the next 6 months unless relief is given. I may state also on authority that approximately 5,000 home owners are about to lose their homes in the county of Summit, of which Akron is the county seat. I know that no man in this great land of ours or no individual has given greater thought or effort to the solution of this problem than has the President of the United States.

Two years ago I had the privilege and honor of discussing foreclosures with the President of the United States. I had the privilege of having him read a letter written by a little girl 13 years old residing in Mansfield, Ohio. The President read this letter to me. He was interested. He afterward had the mother and the girl call upon him at the White House. He wrote a letter to the director of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Ohio. That was 2 years ago, but up to date that loan has not been granted; not entirely because of bureaucratic red tape, but at first by the opposition of the greedy money lenders who would not accept Government bonds until this Government guaranteed the principal of these bonds. I am not criticising entirely this bureau that we have heard so much about today. In my own State they have done a pretty good job, but the funds are not sufficient. They cannot take care of half of the distressed cases existing at the present time.

There have been introduced in this body a dozen or so bills increasing the amount of bonds from one billion to three or five billion dollars. I assume this House will take favorable action. However, in the meantime thousands of distressed home owners will lose their homes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Why should thousands of distressed home owners lose their homes simply because they are unemployed, out of a job, unable to pay the interest and to pay taxes?

This is what is happening in this country of ours. One gentleman has stated that 350,000 applications are pending with the H. O. L. C. and no help in sight for these distressed people.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that 2 years ago I introduced in this House a bill that would have suspended all foreclosures; that would have given a moratorium of 1 year until any distressed farmer or distressed home owner could refinance his mortgage. I am again introducing this bill, only I have made the time stipulation 5 years—5 years in which any man or any woman who is about to lose his or her home may have time to refinance such loans or to refinance such mortgages and save the dearest thing in all the world for them.

We speak of confidence. We all ask for confidence. We say that a restoration of confidence is necessary to create business and turn the wheels of industry once again. How can you expect to have confidence, my friends, when you are about to lose all that you have had and worked hard and toiled for?

So I call your attention to this bill once again, and I ask at this time unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that this bill, which is a short one, may be inserted as an extension of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, approved March 3, 1933; to restore confidence and prevent confiscation of homes and farms by money lenders by providing for a suspension of real-estate foreclosures for a period of 5 years

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended by the acts of February 5, 1903, June 15, 1906, June 25, 1910, March 2, 1917, January 7, 1922, May 27, 1926, February 11, 1932, and March 3, 1933, be, and it is hereby, amended by adding thereto an amendment to chapter VIII, section 75, by adding thereto subsection "S" to read as follows:

"BANKRUPTCY—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS

"SECTION 1. If on or within 5 years after the day this act takes effect any farmer or home owner or owner of real property occupied by such owner is unable to pay and is in default in the payment of either principal or interest of any debt secured by a mortgage on such farm or real property, or of taxes, the nonpayment of which constitutes a default under such mortgage, such default shall constitute an act of bankruptcy, and such farmer or owner of real property being, therefore, unable to pay his or her debts as they fall due shall be deemed insolvent and a bankrupt for the purpose of this title.

"SEC. 2. No proceeding to foreclose or otherwise to enforce any claim against or out of the farm home or real property of such bankrupt and no sale on foreclosure, execution, or otherwise shall be instituted, further prosecuted, held, or made on or within 5 years after the day this act takes effect except upon petition in bankruptcy duly filed in a court of the United States pursuant to the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as heretofore amended."

Mr. TRUAX. I want you to read this bill and study it. It is simple. It is merely an amendment to the National Bankruptcy Act, over which Congress has full and complete and plenary power. It is up to this body. You have it in your power, you have it in your grasp to stop every foreclosure in this great country of ours the day you enact this bill into law.

It is constitutional. The Frazier-Lemke farm bankruptcy bill, which is based on the same principle, has been held constitutional by eight Federal judges, and I believe, as most of you believe, it will be eventually held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

I may say that your greatest help in the restoration of confidence in this country is to provide for the security of your home, to make it inviolate, so that the ruthless money lender, the greedy Shylock, cannot come into your home and say, "I will dispossess you and take from you the hard-earned savings of your years of toil and work."

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] such time as he may desire.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, there is in the District of Columbia at this very hour a distressing and alarming crime condition which portends not only trouble for those who reside in the National Capital in the months that are just ahead but also far-reaching results to the country.

I was gratified yesterday, in talking with the Chairman of the House District Committee, to find that she is ready to cause a sweeping investigation of crime conditions in the District of Columbia.

Such an investigation during this Congress would result not only in far-reaching benefits to the National Capital but also benefits to the country at large. We who come here as Members of Congress hardly realize the alarming condition which faces the National Capital. As Members of this legislative body, we are directly responsible for conditions in Washington and for the welfare of those who reside here.

There is in Washington a wide-spread and dangerous idea that the District is comparatively free of crime of a serious nature.

There is absolutely no basis for such an impression, when, as a matter of proven fact, Washington is one of the most crime-ridden cities in the United States in proportion to population.

This broad charge is unimpeachably established by the crime statistics taken from official records following a study of crime conditions in the District.

The statistics are presented herewith. The records from which these figures were obtained are available for examination by any individual or body seeking a solution to Washington's serious crime problem.

That there is an abnormal amount of serious crime in Washington is shown by the record of the fiscal year of 1934, which is as follows:

|---|---|
| Persons murdered in the District | 81 |
| Persons killed through manslaughter by negligence | 36 |
| Persons assaulted, with intent to kill, dangerous weapons, etc | 239 |
| Persons robbed, storekeepers, bank clerks, pay-roll messengers, etc | 961 |
| Houses and other places entered and burglarized | 2,638 |
| Automobiles stolen for criminal and other purposes | 3,169 |
| Grand larceny, thefts (except autos) $5 and over in value | 1,056 |
| Rape, mayhem, arson, forgery, extortion, embezzlement, and other felonies | 695 |
| Total of felonies recorded by the Metropolitan Police | 8,875 |

Here is how Washington compares with other cities:

There are in the United States eight cities of approximately the same size as Washington. The following tabulation of crime rates, based on the number of crimes for each 100,000 inhabitants, proves that Washington's crime rate is abnormal.

These figures are computed from crime records for the first 9 months of 1934 only. They are, therefore, approximately 25 percent under the figures for the whole year.

| City | Population | Murder | Robbery | Burglary | Grand larceny | Auto theft |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Pittsburgh | 669,117 | 2.5 | 89.8 | 113.3 | 58.2 | 278.5 |
| San Francisco | 634,394 | 2.3 | 32.7 | 289.4 | (1) | 404.0 |
| Milwaukee | 578,249 | .4 | 9.5 | 110.6 | 50.7 | 104.5 |
| Buffalo | 573,076 | 2.2 | 34.3 | 114.0 | 34.3 | 188.9 |
| Washington | 486,869 | 10.3 | 99.7 | 393.2 | 168.8 | 480.8 |
| Minneapolis | 464,356 | 4.1 | 97.3 | 305.6 | 29.6 | 490.4 |
| New Orleans | 458,762 | 10.1 | 15.5 | 139.1 | (1) | 157.8 |
| Cincinnati | 451,160 | 12.9 | 49.6 | 185.0 | 92.3 | 201.9 |
| Newark | 442,337 | 3.6 | 95.0 | 691.5 | (1) | 417.1 |

[1] No report available.

In comparison with these other cities, it will be noted, Washington's crime rate is as follows: Murder, second; robbery, first; burglary, second; grand larceny, first; auto theft, second.

How, in the face of these facts, can anyone contend, with logic, that there is no serious crime in Washington?

In proportion to population Washington had in 1934 two and one-half times as many murders as New York and 40 percent more murders than Chicago.

The complete record of murders in the District and the disposition of murder cases by the authorities is as follows:

|---|---|
| Murders reported to the police | 81 |
| Cleared by arrest | 77 |
| Fugitives | 2 |
| Unsolved | 2 |
| Suicide at time of murder | 4 |
| Died before prosecution | 1 |
| Action of the grand jury: | |
| Ignored for lack of sufficient evidence | 6 |
| Indicted in first degree | 38 |
| Indicted in second degree | 8 |
| Indicted for manslaughter | 20 |
| Action of the district attorney: | |
| In 38 first-degree indictments: | |
| Pleas of guilty to second-degree murder accepted | 12 |
| Pleas of guilty to manslaughter accepted | 14 |
| Nol-prossed | 2 |
| Brought to trial in criminal court | 8 |
| Awaiting trial | 1 |
| Fugitive after indictment | 1 |
| In 8 second-degree indictments: | |
| Pleas of guilty to manslaughter accepted | 2 |
| Nol-prossed | 2 |
| Brought to trial in criminal court | 4 |
| In 20 manslaughter indictments: | |
| Pleas of guilty to manslaughter accepted | 8 |
| Nol-prossed | 7 |
| Brought to trial in criminal court | 5 |
| Action of the criminal court: | |
| In the 8 first-degree cases brought to trial: | |
| Guilty of second-degree murder | 2 |
| Guilty of manslaughter | 2 |
| Acquittals | 3 |
| Unsound mind | 1 |
| In the 4 second-degree cases brought to trial: | |
| Guilty of manslaughter | 2 |
| Acquittals | 2 |
| In the 5 cases of manslaughter brought to trial: | |
| Guilty of manslaughter | 2 |

The penalty for first-degree murder is death in the electric chair, the penalty for second-degree murder is from 20 years to life imprisonment, and the penalty for manslaughter is from 1 to 15 years in the penitentiary.

Of the murder cases resulting in conviction, either after trial or upon guilty pleas, sentences imposed were: 3 for life, 4 for 30 years, 1 for 25 years, 6 for 20 years, and the balance, under the lighter manslaughter penalties, ranged from 1 to 2 years up to 1 sentence of 3 to 12 years.

The following table shows the number of crimes committed, the number cleared by arrest; and the race, sex, and age of those arrested and charged with the commission of the crimes:

| Fiscal year 1934 | | | Arrests | | | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | Over 21 | | | | 17 to 21 | | | | Under 17 | | | |
| Crime | Number reported | Cleared by arrest | Male | Female | White | Colored | Male | Female | White | Colored | Male | Female | White | Colored |
| Murder | 81 | 78 | 68 | 13 | 12 | 69 | 1 | | | 1 | 1 | | | 1 |
| Robbery | 970 | 478 | 524 | 21 | 200 | 345 | 90 | 2 | 35 | 57 | 10 | | | 10 |
| Housebreaking | 2,674 | 1,939 | 1,228 | 4 | 168 | 1,064 | 557 | 18 | 241 | 334 | 62 | | 2 | 60 |
| Other felonies | 5,150 | 3,881 | 1,462 | 153 | 697 | 918 | 453 | 15 | 252 | 216 | 236 | 1 | 127 | 110 |

SUMMARY

|---|---|
| Total felonies reported to the police | 8,875 |
| Total cleared by arrest | 6,376 |
| Total of persons arrested | 4,919 |
| Total colored | 3,185 |
| Total white | 1,734 |
| Total males | 4,692 |
| Total females | 227 |
| Total over 21 | 3,473 |
| Total 17 to 21 | 1,136 |
| Total under 17 | 310 |

Out of a total of 8,875 felonies, 6,376 were cleared by arrest, and in which 4,919 persons were arrested; there were a total of only 1,244 grand-jury indictments.

The following figures are from the annual report of the district attorney for the fiscal year 1934:

|---|---|
| Criminal cases | 1,244 |
| Completed during 1934 (fiscal year) | 1,166 |
| Convicted after jury trial | 166 |
| Convicted on pleas entered | 755 |
| Indictments nolle prossed | 192 |
| Acquittals | 49 |
| Dismissed on motion | 4 |
| Awaiting trial, in jail | 10 |
| Awaiting trial, on bond | 57 |
| Postponed, fugitives, etc | 143 |

In addition to the felonies, as shown in the foregoing figures, there were in the District during the fiscal year 1934 a total of 57,958 misdemeanors, municipal regulations and traffic cases.

These cases are handled by the police, the corporation counsel's office, and the police, juvenile, and municipal courts principally.

Cases thus handled were as follows:

|---|---|
| Police court of the District of Columbia | 54,823 |
| Juvenile court of the District of Columbia | 2,261 |
| Municipal court of the District of Columbia | 45 |
| Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia | 144 |
| Supreme Court of the United States | 1 |
| Lunacy proceedings | 669 |

Of the total, 25,602 were traffic cases and 29,221 were so-called "District of Columbia cases."

In 1933 the total of such cases was 50,430, or 7,528 less than in 1934.

The corporation counsel's office handles the tremendous number of District of Columbia and traffic cases with only four assistant corporation counsels in police court.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, that concludes the general debate for today. General debate will continue tomorrow. I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PARSONS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3410, the independent offices appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill known as the "farmers' emergency relief bill." I have introduced it at the request of a number of constituents in my State and a number of farm and labor organizations throughout the country.

In introducing the bill by request, I do not feel that I personally must necessarily be in favor of all of the provisions of the bill or of any of them. I do feel, however, that when organizations of citizens in this country desire to petition Congress for redress for conditions which they believe to exist, that they have the right under the Constitution to be heard and that they ought to have an opportunity for the consideration of such a bill. I trust that the committee that will have charge of it will hold hearings and give the movers of the bill ample opportunity to be heard.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman does not mean that he is apologizing for the bill?

Mr. BURDICK. No; I mean to say that I am not personally in favor of all of the many provisions of the bill, but have introduced it only by request. Does that make it perfectly clear to the gentleman?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but I thought the gentleman's statement was rather unusual.

Mr. BURDICK. It is an unusual bill, and that is the reason for it. [Laughter.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DALY, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for 2 days, on account of illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the House that the Committee on Committees of the majority is ready to report and there will be a caucus tomorrow at 4 o'clock to verify their action. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 10, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WOODRUM: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 3410. A bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 5). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XIII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOODRUM: A bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DEEN: A bill (H. R. 3411) authorizing an appropriation for the eradication and control of the screw worm; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 3412) to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 3413) to amend the act of Congress entitled "An act to repeal and reenact chapter 100, 1914, Public Law No. 108, to provide for the restoration of Fort McHenry, in the State of Maryland, etc."; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEY: A bill (H. R. 3414) to authorize the raising of funds by lottery for the purpose of providing additional means of defraying the cost of government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'MALLEY: A bill (H. R. 3415) providing that the Collector of Internal Revenue for the United States be required to certify to the Secretary of War of the United States a list of the names of individuals in the United States setting forth their respective incomes, such list to be used for the purpose of Army service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H. R. 3416) to establish the Fort Caroline National Monument in Duval County, Fla.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1935

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of infinite power and love, Creator of the world and tender Shepherd of the souls of men: Sanctify each day to us that throughout our brief sojourn on earth we may concentrate our little strength on life and love and duty as we find them here. Speak to us, Lord, as we wait in the hush of Thy presence, that the voice of Thy stillness may persuade us to repentance for the past, to holiness in the present, and to faith in the future of Thy revealing love. We ask it in the name of Him who is Thy Word made flesh, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Senate of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
SENATE OF NEW JERSEY,
Statehouse, Trenton, N. J.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Introduced and adopted by the senate, December 17, 1934, and concurred in by the house of assembly, December 17, 1934

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Federal Government for the immediate cash payment at face value of adjusted-service certificates

Whereas the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates issued by the United States Government to veterans of the World War will increase tremendously the purchasing power of millions of the consuming public, distributed uniformly throughout the Nation; and will provide relief for those holders thereof who are in dire need and distress because of the present unfortunate economic conditions; and will lighten immeasurably the burden which cities, counties, and States are now required to carry for relief; and

Whereas the payment of said certificates will not create any additional debt, but would discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of New Jersey (the house of assembly concurring), That since the Government of the United States is now definitely committed to the policy of spending additional suns of money for the purpose of hastening recovery in the present economic crisis, the Legislature of the State of New Jersey recommend the immediate cash payment at face value of said adjusted-service certificates; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, duly certified, be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the United States Senators and Congressmen who will represent the State of New Jersey in the next Congress.

I hereby certify that the above resolution is a true and official copy of the resolution adopted by the senate on December 17, 1934, and concurred in by the house of assembly on December 17, 1934.

CHARLES F. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the early acquisition of the properties of the two major telegraph companies by the Government and their operation on the basis of service at cost by the Post Office Department, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Portland, Oreg., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the construction and maintenance of transmission lines and distribution systems by the Government within the Bonneville Dam project, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Arkansas, praying for the enactment of legislation providing old-age pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Parsons, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation granting the Interstate Commerce Commission power to regulate rates for all common carriers, and also legislation to permit transcontinental railroads to compete more freely with water-borne traffic through the Panama Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the legislative committee of the Order of Railway Conductors, Department of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation limiting the car length of trains, providing for the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, the supervision by the Government of bus and truck transportation, and the strengthening of the Railroad Retirement Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the board of directors of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, New York City, N. Y., favoring the granting of adequate support to the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey for the performance of their functions of promoting safety and efficiency and conserving and developing natural resources, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also presented a resolution of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, expressing the attitude of that society toward the medical care of indigents in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a number of resolutions received from various highly esteemed organizations of my State.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred as indicated below:

To the Committee on Banking and Currency:

WOODSIDE CIVIC ASSOCIATION,
Woodside, Long Island, January 7, 1935.

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR:

Whereas there exists, and has existed, in the county of Queens for the past several years a very serious condition among the home owners of this county, caused by the financial distress and the lack of new mortgage financing; and

Whereas the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was established for the purpose of affording assistance to the distressed home owners; and

Whereas we deem it of vital importance to the security of our social standing and the financial stability of our country that the home owners be protected against loss of their homes; and

Whereas more than 23,000 applications have been filed in the county of Queens for refinancing by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; and

Whereas it is a fact that approximately 8,000 applicants have not been able to receive the benefit of refinancing by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation because of a shortage of appropriations; and

Whereas these 8,000 home owners have no other available source of relief and are in immediate danger of losing their homes, causing irreparable damage to the families affected and to the community at large; and

Whereas it appears unfair that out of 23,000 applications, of which 15,000 have received the benefit of refinancing, to neglect those 8,000 applicants without any prior warning:

Therefore, we, the following members of the Woodside Civic Association, of Queens County, city and State of New York, in the interest of these 8,000 home owners respectfully petition the above Members of Congress to put forth and enact such legislation at the coming session of Congress which take care of as many of these distressed cases as are worthy of consideration.

Yours very truly,

WOODSIDE CIVIC ASSOCIATION,
WM. A. KUELLIN, President.
ELLEN T. BOWES, Secretary.

To the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the National Revolutionary Party, in defiance of democratic procedure and by military force, is now in complete control of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Government of Mexico and has used and is using its power to enforce a totalitarian despotism upon a helpless people and, under the guise of constitutional government, to violate the natural rights of man, proscribe freedom of worship and personal liberty; and

Whereas Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, the acknowledged leader of the National Revolutionary Party, and his associates have been for several years and are now responsible for the murder, robbery, imprisonment, or exile of priests, religious and thousands of innocent men, women, and children, and also for the closing, desecration, and seizure of churches, schools, seminaries, and private property; and

Whereas the Mexican Government as now controlled is substituting atheism and communism for Christianity and slavery for freedom; and

Whereas millions of citizens of the United States sympathize with the betrayed, oppressed, and suffering people of Mexico and wish to show their sympathy and to attract the fair-minded attention of their fellow citizens to the atrocities committed by a godless minority: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the members of Council No. 794, Knights of Columbus, Lindenhurst, Long Island, at regular meeting assembled:

1. That we fervently pray that the reign of terror in Mexico shall cease.

2. That we do everything in our power, by word and by act, to make the facts of such oppression and persecution known to the people of the United States.

3. That we protest against the crimes of this anti-Christian tyranny and also against any intervention by the Government of the United States or its representatives in support of the National Revolutionary Party of Mexico.

4. That we refrain from trade relations which are profitable to the supporters of the National Revolutionary Party and urge tourists not to visit Mexico.

5. That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the United States Senators from New York, and our Congressmen.

ST. SAVIOR'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH,
SIXTH STREET AND EIGHTH AVENUE,
Brooklyn, N. Y., December 10, 1934.

Hon. PLUTARCO ELIAS CALLES,
President of Mexico, Mexico City, Mexico.

DEAR SIR:

Resolved, That the Holy Name Society of St. Savior's Roman Catholic Church files protest with you against the activity of your Government in suppression of the rights of man, and specifically the right to worship as one's conscience dictates and to receive the benefits of a free religious education.

Whereas your Government has denied the people of your country liberty of religious worship, of education, of speech, and of the press, and we protest with our whole heart and soul against this anti-Christian tyranny. The policy of your Government is not anti-Catholic but anti-God, aiming to drive all religion from the country, and by the power of God it will strike back at your people unless the condition is corrected; and

Whereas we wish for Mexico prosperity in its national life, in its economic and social life. We wish it the more honestly when we ask primarily a fidelity to the fundamental rights of liberty of conscience, freedom of religious worship, freedom of education, freedom of the press, and freedom of assembly and petition; be it finally

Resolved, That as Christian men, who believe in God and all that is right and just, we present our plea, asking that you please act, that justice be done, common justice for man, which is the security of every man and every nation.

ST. SAVIOR'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH,
LEO V. DOWNEY, Chairman.

(Copies sent to Hon. Franklin Delano Roosevelt; Hon Plutarco Elias Calles, President of Mexico; Hon. Gov. H. H. Lehman; Hon. Senator R. S. Copeland.)

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. HALE presented several petitions, resolutions, and papers favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, and asked that they be printed in the RECORD,

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLARK MEMORIAL METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
Portland, Maine., December 10, 1934.

Senator FREDERICK HALE,

DEAR SENATOR HALE: I enclose herewith petitions properly signed relative to the World Court issue. You will note that you are requested to read them in full into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the first week in January.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST W. ROBINSON.

RESOLUTION ENDORSING THE THREE PENDING WORLD COURT TREATIES FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL MINISTERS OF PORTLAND, MAINE, 1934

Whereas the road to peace lies through the development of satisfactory pacific methods of settling international disputes rather than through any hope that in an increasingly complex world misunderstandings will cease to arise; and

Whereas the World Court has in its 12 years of existence successfully settled 47 questions, some of which if left long unsettled would probably have led to war; and

Whereas both major parties have endorsed our adherence to the Court, thus removing the measure from the field of partisan politics; and

Whereas the Senate has approved our adherence under certain conditions, and the Department of State has declared that those conditions are fully met by the three treaties now awaiting the Senate's consent to ratification: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Churches in Portland, Maine, declare their agreement with the support of the pending Court treaties by the denomination as a whole, and urge both Maine Senators to use their best efforts to insure early and favorable action upon the Court treaties by the Senate in the 1935 session; and be it further

Resolved, That the senior Senator from this State is hereby requested to read this resolution in full into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the first week in January.

Approved by the Methodist Ministers' Association of Portland and vicinity at its regular meeting of December 3, in Portland, Maine, and ordered signed and forwarded.

RESOLUTION ENDORSING THE WORLD COURT TREATIES FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE PORTLAND (MAINE) MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

Whereas the United States has been on record before the world since the First Hague Conference in 1899 as advocating the judicial settlement of certain kinds of international disputes; and

Whereas the World Court has been successfully applying the judicial method to disputes between nations for the past 12 years and the Senate 8 years ago voted that the United States should adhere to this Court if certain conditions were met; and

Whereas in the judgment of the Department of State, of the American Bar Association, and of other competent bodies, the Senate's conditions are fully met by the three treaties which the United States signed, under Executive authority, 5 years ago, but which still await the Senate's consent to ratification: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Ministerial Association of Portland, Maine, hereby earnestly requests the Senate to give its consent early in the 1935 session to ratification of the three pending World Court treaties so that the adherence of the United States to the Court may be completed without further and needless delay.

Favorably acted upon by the Ministers' Union of Portland and vicinity at regular meeting, held October 8, 1934.

A. W. WENTWORTH, Secretary.

RESOLUTION ENDORSING THE PENDING WORLD COURT TREATIES FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS OF PORTLAND, MAINE, 1934

Whereas one of the purposes of the Congregational Christian Churches is to promote just and friendly international relations; and

Whereas the application of the principles of international law to the settlement of disputes between nations is one effective means of strengthening the forces of peace and justice; and

Whereas the World Court has dealt so wisely with the 47 questions it has settled to date that in every instance its decision has been accepted by the nations involved in the dispute although the Court has no enforcing power; and

Whereas the adherence of the United States would increase the Court's prestige and influence and would thus help to lessen the wide-spread fear of war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congregational Christian ministers of Portland, Maine, express to the Maine Senators and the members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate their earnest hope that the Senate will give its consent early in the 1935 session to the three Court treaties which, when ratified, will complete the adherence of this country to the Court; and be it further

Resolved, That the senior Senator from this State is hereby requested to read this resolution in full into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the first week of the session.

Rev. F. Jefferson Neal, minister of the St. Lawrence Congregational Church; Rev. Rodney W. Roundy, superintendent of the Congregational-Christian Conference of Maine; Rev. Willard H. Palmer, assistant superintendent of the Congregational-Christian Conference of Maine; Rev. Walter K. Miller, minister of the Stevens Avenue Congregational and North Deering Churches; Rev. John C. Schroeder, minister of the State Street Congregational Church; Rev. Morris H. Turk, former minister of the Williston Congregational Church; Rev. John Rossnagel, Jr., minister of the West Congregational Church; Rev. Cornelius E. Clark, minister of the Woodfords Congregational Church.

RESOLUTION ENDORSING THE THREE PENDING WORLD COURT TREATIES FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CLERGY IN PORTLAND, MAINE, 1934

Whereas the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church is on record as approving the adherence of the United States to the World Court; and

Whereas both major parties have endorsed the court and the Senate has voted for our adherence if certain conditions are met; and

Whereas in the judgment of the Department of State and other competent bodies the interests of the United States are fully protected and the reservations of the Senate fully met by the three treaties which the United States accordingly signed, under Executive authority, in 1929, and which when ratified will complete our adherence; and

Whereas our entry into the court would tend to increase the dependence of nations throughout the world upon pacific substitutes for war, and thus to help stabilize international relations; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Churches in Portland, Maine, hereby urge the Senate of the United States to consent to ratification of the World Court treaties early in the 1935 session.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN,
WATERVILLE CHAPTER,
Waterville, Maine, December 4, 1934.

Senator HALE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR HONORABLE HALE: A resolution endorsing the three pending World Court treaties was sent to the faculty of Colby College for consideration. The Waterville chapter of the American Association of University Women wished also to endorse these resolutions as a part of their international relations committee program as follows:

Whereas the United States has advocated the judicial settlement of certain types of international disputes since the time of the First Hague Conference in 1899; and

Whereas the World Court has been successfully applying the judicial method to the settlement of international disputes for 12 years; and

Whereas the Senate voted for our adherence to the Court in 1926 if certain conditions were met and the United States signed, under Executive authority, the three pending World Court treaties, because, in the judgment of the Department of State and other competent bodies, they do fully meet the Senate's conditions and will, when ratified, complete our adherence: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Waterville chapter of the American Association of University Women express its earnest hope that the Senate of the United States will give its consent early in the 1935 session to ratification of the three pending World Court treaties so that the United States may complete its adherence to the Court and thus make clear to all the world its support of the settlement of international disputes by judicial process.

The Waterville branch of the American Association of University Women also wishes you support the Court treaties on the floor of the Senate.

Respectfully yours,

BARBARA E. JOHNSON,
Chairman International Relations Committee,
Waterville Branch, A. A. U. W.

COLBY COLLEGE,
Waterville, Maine, December 10, 1934.

Senator FREDERICK HALE,

MY DEAR SENATOR HALE: At the regular monthly meeting of the faculty of Colby College, held on Wednesday, November 14, the following resolution endorsing the three pending World Court treaties was presented by Prof. William J. Wilkinson, head of the department of history and political science, and was by unanimous vote, accepted and adopted as expressing the true sentiment of this body:

Whereas the United States has advocated the judicial settlement of certain types of international disputes since the time of the First Hague Conference in 1899; and

Whereas the World Court has been successfully applying the judicial method to the settlement of international disputes for 12 years; and

Whereas the Senate voted for our adherence to the Court in 1926 if certain conditions were met, and the United States signed, under executive authority, the three pending World Court treaties, because, in the judgment of the Department of State and other competent bodies, they do fully meet the Senate's conditions and will, when ratified, complete our adherence: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the faculty of Colby College expresses its earnest hope that the Senate of the United States will give its consent early in the 1935 session to ratification of the three pending World Court treaties so that the United States may complete its adherence to the Court and thus make clear to all the world its support of the settlement of international disputes by judicial process.

We respectfully request that you support the Court treaties on the floor of the Senate.

Yours very truly,

FRANKLIN W. JOHNSON.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF IN WESTERN MINNESOTA

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter I received late yesterday from one of my constituents in western Minnesota relative to relief for both people and animals and ask that this letter be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. The writer specifically mentions Senators BORAH, LA FOLLETTE, and NORRIS in the hope that they might lend a helping hand, and cites urgent need for aid.

The letter comes from an area in my State that is greatly in need of help, where crops failed entirely, where about the only feed they have for their animals is Russian thistles, and they cost $10 or so a ton. The cost of straw and hay is prohibitive to people on relief. The loss of their animals has lessened chances for the farmers to recover from their plight. The situation is becoming dramatic and calls for immediate action and help.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DAWSON, MINN., January 5, 1935.

Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL,

DEAR SENATOR: Imperative that Government ship in here at once adequate quantities of food; we mean pork, beef, lard, butter, cheese, sugar, rice, clothing, mattresses, woolen as well as cotton blankets, and fuel to take care of some 1,500 families on relief in Lac Qui Parle County. This county has had 2 years of drought and the supply of surplus commodities is about exhausted at court house, and hard telling when any will arrive again.

Farmers are in need of hay, feed, and straw, and the $25 allowance for every 30 days amounts to nothing when you consider price of feed, corn $1 a bushel, barley same, oats 65 cents a bushel, hay $25 to $28 a ton. How do you think it can be done? It simply can't be, that's all.

I wish you would make a determined effort to get this increased to $50. Families residing in country towns are cut off from hay and feed for their milch cows, etc., so essential to family needs. I would appreciate to learn from where such orders emanate. From 25 to 50 carloads of hay and straw are said to be stored at different points in this county—of what use when not distributed? So the patience of our disheartened farmers is about exhausted. It is rumored that a possible 1,000 farmers propose to seize these animal necessities within the next few days and distribute them among themselves. Is that to be the climax caused by the set-up just put into effect in Minnesota—chamber of commerce firms to handle distribution?

It has been rumored that a possible cut of 40 percent may come in State allowance for relief. In that event it is very essential to secure action at once along the lines herein outlined. And I venture to say 15 or more counties of western Minnesota are much the same in this respect.

Kindly contact Senator BORAH, whose activities on behalf of relief I have watched with considerable interest. Also suggest you contact Senator NORRIS, Senator LA FOLLETTE et al., also Harry Hopkins, Lawrence Westbrook, Keith Sutherland, and the President if necessary to secure action.

A meeting will be held here on Wednesday evening, January 9, and would appreciate to have a report from you if possible by then so I could inform audience of what may be expected.

How does this strike you?

If Government is unable to provide feed and hay so as to assure farmers of keeping all their stock, let Government buy up certain percent and put the unemployed to work butchering them here at home in each drought county and have meat distributed by those unemployed and those on small budgets to our needy families, as I proposed last April 28 at large meeting at Montevideo, Minn. Thus food would be distributed in place of promises and large figures, which do not feed starving people.

What has become of all meat from cattle bought in eight Central and Southwest States? No figures available on number bought, pounds of meat processed, and money invested in such stock. Number of condemned animals buried, even without being skinned.

What about Government opening up a tannery or tanneries and shoe factories, using all the hides from these animals and furnish shoes, and so on, for our millions in need of them. (That might become a real new deal.)

Sincerely yours,

I. L. GRAVEN.

WORLD COURT PROTOCOLS (EXEC. REPT. NO. 1)

As in executive session,

Mr. ROBINSON. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report the protocols relating to the World Court, with a resolution of adherence, and ask that the report may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The executive report will be received and printed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer a proposed reservation to the resolution of adherence to the World Court and ask that it may be printed and lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. BYRNES, from the Select Committee on Investigation of Campaign Expenditures (pursuant to S. Res. 73, 73d Cong.), submitted a report relative to the investigation of senatorial campaign expenditures in 1934 (Rept. No. 11).

PERMISSION TO INTRODUCE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice of my intention to introduce a joint resolution proposing to amend the National Recovery Act with reference to "hot oil" or contraband oil, and possibly other measures. The measure referred to is patterned after the Webb-Kenyon Act and other acts which have been sustained by the Supreme Court. The draft has not as yet been completed, and I should like to ask unanimous consent to hand it to the Secretary of the Senate after the Senate adjourns.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I did not understand the nature of the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma gives notice of intention to introduce one or more joint resolutions touching certain legislation and asks unanimous consent that he may hand the measures to the Secretary after the Senate shall adjourn. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request similar to that made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I have had the bill in question drafted, but I am changing one paragraph, and I should like to have permission similar to that granted the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

LICENSING OF CORPORATIONS ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE OR FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 579) to provide for the licensing of corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

A bill to provide for the licensing of corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Corporation Licensing Act of 1935."

LICENSE REQUIRED FOR INTERSTATE OR FOREIGN BUSINESS

SEC. 2. On and after —— days from the date of enactment of this act, it shall be unlawful for any corporation (except a bank, a common carrier subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, a common carrier or, insofar as engaged in radio broadcasting, a licensee, subject to the Communications Act of 1934, a China Trade Act corporation, or a corporation the majority of the stock of which is held by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof or corporations engaged in publishing newspapers, magazines, or books) organized under the laws of the United States or the District of Columbia, or of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or of any foreign country, to engage directly or indirectly in interstate or foreign commerce, without first having obtained a license therefor from the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"); and for the purposes of this act a corporation shall be deemed to be engaged in interstate or foreign commerce if it holds control (through stock ownership, a voting trust or trusts, a holding company or companies, or any other direct or indirect means) of a corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or of two or more corporations any one of which is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. As used in this act, the term "interstate or foreign commerce" means commerce between any place in a State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State or within the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof.

ISSUANCE OF LICENSES

SEC. 3. (a) Before any license shall be issued under this act the applicant corporation shall file with the Commission a sworn statement with respect to its operations, which shall include information concerning its organization and financial structure, the character of its transactions in interstate or foreign commerce, the terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of its securities outstanding, the terms on which its securities have been offered to the public or otherwise, the property taken by the corporation at the time of its organization, and the consideration paid therefor in money or otherwise, its bonded indebtedness and the interests of the promoters therein, the personnel and salaries of its management, its charter and bylaws, the number and local distribution of its stockholders, contracts made with promoters and with financial interests with respect to the organization of the corporation, management and service contracts, special legislation relating to the corporation, its profits and losses for not more than the — preceding fiscal years, and such further information with respect to the operations of the corporation as the Commission may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(b) Application for such licenses shall be made, and the licenses shall be issued, in such manner as the Commission shall by regulation prescribe. Each such license shall contain such terms and conditions as the Commission shall prescribe as necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act, shall be effective from the date specified therein, and shall continue in effect until suspended or revoked.

(c) The Commission shall by order deny the application for a license of any applicant corporation which fails to comply with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, or if the Commission finds that the applicant corporation is an unlawful trust or combination in violation of the antitrust laws as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, that it is a party to any contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in violation of such laws, or that it is monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, or combining or conspiring with any other person to monopolize, any part of such trade or commerce.

REVOCATION OF LICENSES

SEC. 4. After appropriate opportunity for notice and hearing, the Commission is authorized by order to suspend or revoke any such license if it finds that the corporation to which the license was issued has violated any provision of this act or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission make thereunder; and the Commission shall revoke the license of any corporation which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, of a violation of the antitrust laws.

REPORTS AND EXAMINATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) Each corporation which obtains a license under this act shall make an annual report to the Commission, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants, which shall contain such information with respect to the organization, capitalization, properties, earnings, profits, dividends, and business methods of the corporation, as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Each such corporation shall also make such special reports, similarly certified, as the Commission shall from time to time require for the purpose of keeping itself informed with respect to the operations of the corporation, and in the event that any such corporation shall increase its capital or issue any bonds, notes, debentures, or similar obligations it shall submit a statement with respect thereto to the Commission. The Commission may prescribe, in regard to reports and statements made pursuant to this section, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and the earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of separate and/or consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the corporation, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the corporation; but in the case of the reports and statements of any corporation whose methods of accounting are prescribed, or whose securities are registered, under the provisions of any law of the United States, or any rule or regulation thereunder, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to such reports and statements shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or rule or regulation in respect of the same subject matter.

(b) The Commission is further authorized to provide for periodical or special examinations of the corporations which obtain licenses under this Act and to establish a schedule of reasonable fees for such examinations and for the issuance of licenses under this Act. All such fees shall be collected by the Commission in such manner as it may direct, and the amount of all fees so collected shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

INVESTIGATIONS

SEC. 6. (a) The Commission may, in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this Act or any rule or regulation thereunder, and may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the Commission shall determine, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated. The Commission is authorized, in its discretion, to publish information concerning any such violations, and to investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may deem necessary or proper to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this Act, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder, or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this Act relates.

(b) For the purpose of any such investigation, or any other proceeding under this Act, any member of the Commission or any officer designated by it is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

(c) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All processes in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both.

(d) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission under this act, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

INJUNCTIONS AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

SEC. 7. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule or regulation thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper district court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this act.

(b) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this act or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

SEC. 8. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding under this act to which such person is a party (except an order under section 4 revoking a license for violation of the antitrust laws) may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, and enforce or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

SEC. 9. The district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall have exclusive jurisdiction of violations of this act or the rules and regulations thereunder, and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this act or the rules and regulations thereunder. Any criminal proceeding may be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by this act or rules and regulations thereunder, or to enjoin any violation of such act or rules and regulations may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review, as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against it in the Supreme Court or such other courts.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 10. The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations and to issue such orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

PENALTIES

SEC. 11. Any corporation subject to this act, or any officer, director, agent, or employee thereof, that willfully violates any provision of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $——— or imprisoned not more than — years, or both, and each day that any such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO ALTER, AMEND, OR REPEAL

SEC. 13. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

REVIVING OF CERTAIN PATENTS

Mr. LEWIS. I introduce a bill for the reviving of certain patents. I ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on Patents, but I owe it to the Senate to say that I was counsel in the matter to which these patents refer, and on the defeated side. This bill is for the purpose of overcoming that adverse opinion.

I feel that I owe that statement to the Senate. While my relation to the matter as counsel will end with this statement, I give it to the Senate, and ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (S. 715) (introduced by Mr. LEWIS) to revive certain patents was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

For the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of a meteorological station upon a site to be selected by the Secretary at Missoula, Mont., $10,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. WHEELER also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

For the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of an assay office at Helena, Mont., $22,000, to be immediately available.

AMERICAN CONSERVATION WEEK

Mr. WAGNER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Whereas under the inspiring leadership of President Cleveland it became the settled policy of this Nation to conserve its natural resources; and

Whereas the establishment of an American conservation week will have the desired effect of bringing the American people to realize in the words of that great conservationist, President Roosevelt, that "the conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life": Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States is requested to issue each year a proclamation designating the first week in April as American conservation week and inviting the people of the United States to observe that week in schools, churches, museums, parks, and other suitable places, with ceremonies appropriate to the occasion.

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. HARRISON. As Chairman of the Committee on Finance, I submit a resolution, which is the usual form of resolution adopted at the beginning of each Congress, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 37) as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Seventy-fourth Congress at such times and places as they may deem advisable; to make investigations into internal revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and other matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary; and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all of the expenses of such committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make no objection to the resolution, but it ought to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I submitted a similar resolution which took that course.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not understand that the resolution carries an appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides for clerical help.

Mr. HARRISON. It provides for clerical help, but, may I say to the Senator, that at previous sessions of Congress when a similar resolution has been offered it has never been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submitted one the other day on behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and it was insisted that it should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the rule is that such resolutions ought to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and that is necessary unless unanimous consent otherwise be given. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the resolution if there is any objection to it. It is a resolution similar to others which have been adopted time after time in the past, authorizing the Finance Committee to have hearings and providing for clerical help and assistance. There has never been any objection heretofore raised to the adoption of similar resolutions.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire if the resolution is in the usual form?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it is in the usual form of such resolutions.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, may I inquire what reason the Senator has for not having the resolution go to the Audit and Control Committee when all similar resolutions have been sent to that committee? It could be acted on today in all probability; and, if not today, surely tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Such resolutions have never gone to any committee heretofore. This is a little different from the ordinary resolution of this character. A little more power is given to the committee in the resolution than is usually given to other committees in such resolutions.

Mr. BYRNES. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 38), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT CLERKS FOR CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. BYRNES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 39), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That whenever during the remainder of the present session of Congress, a Senator shall file with the Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a statement showing the necessity for an additional clerical assistant to enable him to discharge the duties of his office, such Senator may appoint one assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,500 per annum until the end of the present session of Congress.

INVESTIGATION OF "KICK-BACK RACKET"

Mr. WALSH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 40), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution numbered 228, agreed to May 30, 1934, authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to investigate the "kick-back racket" in public works and construction, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

CORNER IN DECEMBER SUGAR FUTURES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer the following Senate resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 41), as follows:

Whereas it is generally understood that a group of so-called "long traders" in sugar, operating through the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, cornered the market in December futures, forcing an ultimate settlement with so-called "short traders" who were speculative sellers; and

Whereas this corner in sugar for domestic consumption resulted, in part, from the use of market limitations created by the Jones-Costigan Act and in part by the price-fixing decrees of the Cuban Government in respect to sugar sales in the continental United States; and

Whereas any such speculation at home and any such price manipulation and price fixing abroad threatens the welfare of domestic consumers and may threaten the welfare of domestic producers and, in any event, jeopardizes the integrity of the Jones-Costigan Act and may nullify its domestic purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to report to the Senate (a) all information at the disposal of the Department and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration respecting this December corner in sugar and the ultimate results as found by the exchange and by these Departments; (b) the history of the dealings of all Government Departments with the merchandising of the 1934 Cuban sugar quota in the United States; (c) the names of all so-called "long" and "short" traders in December futures on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange; (d) the names of the board of directors of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange and the personnel of the Cuban Sugar Stabilization Institute, and the identification of any banks or other financial institutions in the United States known to have been connected with the financing, or the refusal to finance, the 1934 Cuban sugar crop; and (e) such recommendations as he may care to make for additional legislation to protect the Jones-Costigan Act and for legislation, if deemed necessary, to control commodity dealings on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, to so much of the Senator's resolution as calls for information I interpose no objection, but in view of the fact that he calls upon a Cabinet officer to recommend legislation I shall object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to have permission to print in the RECORD a brief statement indicating the necessity for the resolution.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

December sugar futures were involved in market speculation on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange last month. The result seems to have been a so-called "corner" on available December sugar and a so-called "squeeze" which required composition between the longs and the shorts.

I do not presume or pretend to prejudge the equities involved. I make no charges against anybody. It is exceedingly difficult to get at the facts except as information is available from official and exchange sources. My resolution simply asks a preliminary presentation to the Senate of the official facts. Advisable subsequent action may be determined in the light of these ultimate facts.

It may well be that the public interest did not actually suffer in this particular instance. It may be that the only victims were the short sellers who were caught upon the horns of their own self-created dilemma. But the episode challenges the inquiry whether or not the conditions created by the Jones-Costigan Act may not invite other and more far-reaching manipulations to the jeopardy of the public interest.

It seems clear that one factor in the recent December corner was the act of the Cuban Government, responsive to Cuban sugar interests, in pegging the price to be paid for sugar in the United States upon the Cuban supply; that this could not be attempted except as the competition of domestic sugar disappeared from the domestic market through the operation of limitation quotas upon domestic production, and that it could not be done except as the Cuban supply, withheld for subsequent higher prices, was financed from New York. In other words, we are put on notice to inquire whether the Jones-Costigan Act has not unwittingly encouraged market manipulation inimical to the people of the United States.

The whole sugar policy of the administration has been amazingly generous to Cuba, not only in respect to the Jones-Costigan Act but also in respect to the subsequent Cuban reciprocal treaty. We are put on notice by the chain of events, in respect to December sugar futures, to inquire whether this generosity does not unintentionally permit our actual exploitation.

The situation which existed in December on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange puts us on further notice to inquire whether during the existence of governmental limitations upon domestic sugar production it is not self-defensively necessary to control market speculation in this commodity.

Full facts are important to correct judgments; and the full facts need to include not only information regarding what actually happened but also the identity of all the actors in the drama and the full record of activities by our own governmental departments charged with sugar administration and with Cuban relations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the resolution as read was not clearly heard here. May I ask the able Senator from Michigan whether it looks toward securing desirable information with respect to the possible bearing of market transactions upon the price of sugar?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That and nothing more, other than other available information which may relate to the whole general subject. I am seeking only the official information available at the Department of Agriculture respecting this situation. I may say to the Senator that I have come to no conclusions in my own mind respecting the matter, but I am perfectly clear that the situation is one which involves the integrity of the act which the able Senator from Colorado championed last year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Like the Senator from Michigan, I am much interested in having information developed with respect to the effect of the market operations spoken of on any prices of sugar in the United States market since the Sugar Act was adopted, and trust I may have an opportunity to confer with the Senator from Michigan during the day about the precise form of the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely wish again to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that it is unusual to call upon members of the Cabinet to recommend legislation. That is a matter which clearly is within the province of the Executive. Any information which the Cabinet member may have is, of course, available for the Senator's use; but I suggest to him that before the matter is called up again he consider revising the resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there is something to be said for the Senator's suggestion. I will confer with him, and with the Senator from Colorado, and I shall anticipate no difficulty in reaching an agreement which will permit passage of the resolution when it comes up, under the rule, on the next calendar day.

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 42), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-fourth Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to make investigations into all matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents in relation thereto, as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report in due course to the Senate the result thereof, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all of the expenses incurred in pursuance hereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO STUDY METHODS OF PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. AUSTIN (for Mr. GIBSON) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 43), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas there exists a large and growing need for low-cost electricity and means for its production and distribution; and

Whereas the time is now propitious for the development of methods for such production and distribution: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That a select committee of the Senate, consisting of five Members, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a study of methods for production and distribution of electricity and confer with and advise the President concerning plans for their adoption. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for further necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

DECISION OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT IN OIL CASES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the decision of the Supreme Court, handed down last Monday, holding void a certain part of the National Recovery Act has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is still in type. In view of its importance, I ask that the majority opinion be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE WASHINGTON EXPERIMENT IN CHARACTER EDUCATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a report on the Washington Experiment in Character Education submitted by Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, Washington, D. C., read at Cooperative Test Service Conference, New York City, November 1, 1934. Our committee investigating crime held its hearings and decided that juvenile delinquency is the most important aspect of this American problem. I also hold in my hand an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post of January 1, 1935, entitled "Character Education", dealing with the same question. I ask that the report and the editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report and the editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

For several reasons I am particularly happy to address this meeting in New York City. In the first place, New York is my home State, and I always take pleasure in returning to it. In the second place, the character-education experiment, which we are inaugurating in Washington, owes its inception to Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, and is greatly indebted also to the Rochester Athenaeum and Mechanics Institute, of which Col. John A. Randall is president.

Senator COPELAND was particularly instrumental in securing the congressional appropriation for inaugurating the experiment in Washington. Moreover, many details of the plan, as we are inaugurating it in Washington, are based on the philosophy and practices which have for a number of years been in operation in the Mechanics Institute of Rochester, where Colonel Randall has organized and promoted a definite program of character education and personality development in that institution.

This paper on the character-education experiment in Washington is divided into two quite distinct parts. Part I deals with the origin, purpose, methodology, set-up, appropriation, and ultimate evaluation of the experiment. Part II deals with the manner in which this experiment, as conceived and inaugurated in Washington, does now or will ultimately affect the purpose and philosophy of education, the program of studies, the methods of teaching, and the objectives and outcomes of education.

PART I

The character-education experiment which was systematically inaugurated in the public schools of Washington in September 1934 grew out of the investigation of crime and racketeering conducted by a committee of the United States Senate of which Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, is chairman, and the other members are Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, of Michigan, and Senator LOUIS MURPHY, of Iowa. The committee found that the cost of crime in the Nation is approximately $13,000,000,000 annually, that this staggering sum represents one-fourth of our national income, and that it is more than three times our total expenditure for education.

The committee also found that the average age of criminals in America is 23 years, that the largest age group is 19 years, and the next largest 18 years. These age groups clearly indicate that crime in America today is committed largely by comparatively young people. Any effort, therefore, by the duly constituted authorities of government and social welfare to reduce crime must be made in behalf of the young people of the Nation, many of whom are now in our public schools, or who have only recently left public school instruction. While the cost of crime can be definitely estimated in terms of billions of dollars annually, the cost of crime in terms of reduced efficiency of our people, degeneracy of our individual and collective moral conduct, and the general unhappiness resulting from crime, are beyond mental comprehension and beyond estimation.

In this experiment a systematic attempt will be made to establish character training as one of the fundamental outcomes of systematic education. The experiment will attempt to determine to what extent, under the conditions existing in a large public-school system, it is possible to affect the attitudes and conduct of young people through the systematic instruction offered in the classroom, through the extracurricular activities, and through the general organization of the school. Within the experiment, as reasonably excellent facilities and resources as are available will be provided with a view of creating as favorable conditions as possible for carrying on the experiment. How much, if any, additional cost these improved facilities require will also be determined.

The experiment is being inaugurated in 10 schools selected for that purpose. Schools were selected where the principals and the teachers were not only willing but interested to try the experiment, and where other resources seemed to offer the largest possibility of success. It is hoped that the experiment will be continued over a period of at least 3 years. It is expected that other Washington schools may be helped in their respective character-training programs by what goes on in the schools in which the experiment is being systematically carried on. The experiment will be formally extended to other schools as rapidly as they are ready, and the financial and other resources are available for carrying it on.

The experiment is being inaugurated in 10 selected, typical schools representing the whole school system. These are 2 elementary schools, 2 vocational schools, 2 junior high schools, 2 senior high schools, 2 senior night high schools.

Each type of school includes a school for white pupils and a school for colored pupils. The project is being inaugurated in the fourth grade of the elementary schools, in the seventh grade of the junior high schools, in the seventh grade of the vocational schools, and in the tenth grade of the senior high schools. As each beginning class completes the year, the project will be carried forward with the class and initiated again with the entering class. Obviously, at the end of the 3-year period each class now beginning the experiment will be graduated from the school. As a result, therefore, at the end of 3 years, the experiment will cover completely each school level. In addition, we shall also have had experience with the vocational schools, 1 for boys and 1 for girls, and also with 2 night schools. In general, the experiment will encompass all types of pupils in a large-city school system.

In general, approximately 28 administrative and supervisory school officers, 277 teachers, and 5,575 pupils are participating in the experiment during this year.

In preparation for the beginning of the experiment, an institute or conference was held for a period of 3 weeks, beginning June 25. These 3-hour conferences were held daily for 3 weeks and were participated in by the superintendent, the 2 first assistant superintendents in charge of junior and senior high schools, the 2 assistant superintendents in charge of elementary schools, the assistant superintendent in charge of the project, the 2 assistant superintendents in charge of the research departments, the 2 supervising principals of the division in which the 2 elementary schools were located, the director of the attendance department, the director of the community-center department, the statistical officer of the system, the principals of the schools, with their assistant principals, and the presidents of the 2 teachers colleges.

In these daily conferences the program for inaugurating the experiment was developed. The conferences were presided over by Dr. W. W. Charters, of Ohio State University, who was assisted by Dr. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia University; Dr. Ralph W. Tyler, of Ohio State University; and Dr. Charles R. Mann, director emeritus of the American Council on Education. Other educational consultants will be secured from time to time as the work progresses.

Congress authorized the expenditure of approximately $70,000 for the additional personnel necessary for the experiment. These are 1 assistant superintendent in charge, 14 statistical clerks, 18 research assistants and counselors, 2 night high-school principals on full time, and outside educational consultants for advice and counsel as the experiment progresses. Funds for equipment and supplies were not appropriated and hence are being taken out of regular appropriations.

The departments of educational research in the white schools and in the colored schools have been assigned the responsibility for evaluating the results of the experiment. In setting up a testing program to be carried on at the beginning of the experiment, they have had the advice and counsel and assistance of Dr. Ralph W. Tyler, of Ohio State University; Dr. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia University; and Dr. Charles R. Mann, of the American Council on Education.

PART II

Having considered the origin, purpose, methodology, etc., of the experiment, your attention is now invited to some of the fundamental educational considerations which are explicit or are implied in the Washington experiment on character education, in which an attempt will be made to establish character training and development as a fundamental outcome of systematic education.

In this experiment character education is not a new subject of instruction added to the program of studies; it is not teaching morals; rather, as we conceive it, it has to do with every aspect of our educational thinking and of our educational practice. Ultimately, it will concern itself also with all organizations of young people avowedly furnishing programs of character training as well as with all those other instrumentalities, agencies, and situations in the community which influence the attitude of mind and the behavior of young people.

Part II deals with some of the possible changes likely to be desirable or necessary as a result of this experiment in the purpose and philosophy of education, the program of studies and training and desired outcomes, the methods of teaching, school organization and administration, and in amount of available information regarding children.

THE PURPOSE AND PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION

A century ago it was the primary purpose of education to teach everybody to read and write with a reasonable degree of proficiency. To a very large extent that very desirable purpose has been realized. If education today were limited to the three R's, it would be as inadequate for the needs of American life at the present time as would be the covered wagon, the horse car, the stagecoach, the spinning wheel and loom, the sailboat, the fireplace, candles, bows and arrows, wells and pumps, the flail and the log cabin.

Today we have advanced far beyond that limited purpose of education and are confronted with the fundamental necessity of developing a higher level of character among the young people of our country. Indispensable as they are, mastery of the three R's is no longer the fundamental purpose of American education. The fundamental purpose of American education is efficient citizenship, which requires not only that people be able to read and write, but that they also be well informed through information acquired at school and be trained in ideals of social justice, which should be observed and practiced in democratic society. The establishment of higher ideals of social justice depends on inculcating in the hearts and minds of young people the compelling ideals of conduct which shall control their thoughts and actions. This is the combined task of the home, the church, and the school as well as all other instrumentalities and conditions which affect the attitudes and actions of developing youth.

If character training is to be one of the outcomes of education, it must be encompassed in the scope and definition of the purpose of education. Heretofore, the results achieved by pupils in the public schools may have been, as Senator COPELAND states, too largely recorded in terms of achievement in subject matter represented by grades earned in the elementary schools and by grades and quantitative units in the senior high schools. Somehow the results of the pursuit of subject matter and of other activities in the school should find their way into the activities, behavior, and conduct of young people. The purpose of education should be redefined to include the ideals of social justice, cooperative living, and the privileges and responsibilities of good citizenship, in addition to present intellectual achievements and manual skills.

Some of the basic principles of the character education program were worked out in the summer conference and agreed to by the members of the conference. Some of these relating to the purpose and philosophy of education were formulated by Dr. Charters in the following language:

"1. The personal aim of education is to help each child develop the desire and the power to make the right choice in any conduct situation.

"2. All education is self-education. In every school the children who are being educated actively participate in planning school activities, in carrying the plans out, and in evaluating the success of their efforts.

"3. Attitudes, desires, and urges are controlling factors in behavior. To help the child learn to want to do right is a major responsibility of schooling.

"4. Clear thinking is essential in meeting new situations and changing conditions effectively. Helping children learn to think their way through in perplexing situations is a major obligation of schooling.

"5. Fundamental habits, virtues, and conventions care adequately for wide areas of behavior. Such habits, when of durable value, should be developed by the school within the situations to which they apply.

"6. Growth and personality are best promoted when children think and act in situations which are real to them. Reality to the children concerned is a prime consideration in selecting the activities that make up the program of every school."

PROGRAM OF STUDIES AND TRAINING AND DESIRED OUTCOMES

The heart of the character-education experiment in Washington is the program of studies and training which is deemed necessary to establish character training and development as a fundamental outcome of systematic education.

Heretofore the major interests of the school have been intellectual training and the development of certain manual skills. While physical education and training has come into our school program, nevertheless it does not yet reach effectively all pupils.

Various extracurricular activities are found in the programs of most progressive school systems, but many teachers minimize their educational value and only reluctantly share the professional responsibility of the faculty for supervising them. This is not said for the purpose of criticizing the teaching profession; but rather to show how much remains to be done professionally before some of the more recent additions to our educational practices find their proper places in our program of instruction.

In a very real sense all education is character education. School programs have usually concerned themselves with certain personality traits which aid in the mastery of subject matter, such as thoroughness, scholastic ambition, and achievement under competition. In the character-education experiment in the public schools of Washington we are interested in a wider range of activities as well as a more definite statement of generally recognized behavior patterns.

In the character-education conference held during the summer, 10 areas of experience were set up. These 10 areas of experience are for exploration by pupils and are in marked contrast to the more restricted areas ordinarily set up for the schools. Definite outcomes to be achieved in each area were also defined. It yet remains to be determined just what outcomes we shall undertake to achieve in the three major types of the school system, namely, elementary, junior, and senior high schools.

The areas to which all children of the schools will be exposed and the outcomes that each at the level of his capacity should achieve are presented in the following statement adopted by the summer conference:

"Part I. An analysis of the fields of experience and a statement of desired results in each of these fields. For the purposes of this study, the committee suggests the following areas—

"1. Health activities.
"2. Intellectual activities.
"3. Economic activities.
"4. Vocational activities.
"5. Political activities.
"6. Recreational activities.
"7. Sex, parenthood, and family life.
"8. Social activities.
"9. Aesthetic activities.
"10. Religious activities.

"Desired results in each of these areas:

"1. Health activities: The field of health activities is understood to include both mental and physical health. Every child—

"(a) Is interested in his own mental and physical health and that of the community.

"(b) Establishes an adequate set of personal health habits based on the facts of physiology, psychology, and hygiene.

"(c) Promotes mental and physical health activities of home, school, and community.

"(d) Has a clear understanding of the important relationships that exist between mental, moral, and physical health.

"(e) Reads health information in magazines and newspapers with intelligence.

"2. Intellectual activities: Every child—

"(a) Sees both the social and the scholarly values of the subject matter pursued in his courses and desires to make it his own.

"(b) Thinks independently and discusses important matters with intelligence.

"(c) Gets a satisfying after-effect from his classroom exercises.

"(d) Sets for himself advancing goals and standards of excellence.

"(e) Has an intelligent respect for scholarship.

"(f) Has facility in reading and in the use of oral and written English.

"3. Economic activities: Every child—

"(a) Understands the considerations underlying the spending, saving, earning, and giving of money.

"(b) Uses money intelligently.

"(c) Is interested and intelligently informed about current economic problems and forms his own tentative solutions.

"(d) Understands the workings of the common economic institutions with which he comes in contact, such as banking, retailing, etc., from the consumer's point of view.

"(e) Sees the economic institutions of society as agencies for promoting social welfare.

"(f) Reads with facility economic materials written for the layman.

"4. Vocational activities: Every child—

"(a) Appreciates the dignity and importance of labor.

"(b) Enjoys the experience of working at his daily tasks.

"(c) Studies with intelligence the occupations that may be open to him and makes his choices in terms of their opportunities and his own capacities and limitations.

"(d) Understands the basic structure and functions of the industrial life of the Nation.

"(e) Reads and understands the materials in this field written for the layman.

"5. Political activities: Every child—

"(a) Has an ingrained and intelligent respect for law.

"(b) Is interested and intelligently informed on the current political problems and forms his own tentative solutions.

"(c) Accepts the obligation of every citizen to participate in the civic life of his community, State, and Nation.

"(d) Understands the workings of governmental agencies with which he comes in contact, such as courts, Congress, and local commissions, from the point of view of the citizen.

"(e) Sees political institutions as methods of promoting social welfare.

"(f) Reads discussions of political issues with intelligence.

"6. Recreational activities: Every child—

"(a) Thinks of recreation as a component part of his life and finds a place for recreation in his daily program.

"(b) Enjoys participation in a variety of well-selected recreational activities.

"(c) Establishes the beginnings of wholesome leisure-time activities.

"(d) Acquires attitudes and habits of cooperation, good sportsmanship, and leadership in recreational activities.

"7. Sex, parenthood, and family life: Every child—

"(a) Sees sex as one of the great moving factors of civilization.

"(b) Has an understanding of reproduction as a biological process.

"(c) Participates intelligently and with good will in the life of his own family.

"(d) Sees the family as the basic unit of society.

"8. Social activities: Every child—

"(a) Has a concept of himself as a valuable member of his group with opportunities and obligations.

"(b) Participates in group activities from inner interest rather than from outer compulsion.

"(c) Practices the ideals of fair play and friendliness in his group relations.

"(d) Appreciates the values of friendship and chooses friends with these values in mind.

"(e) Consistently seeks to understand the point of view of other people.

"(f) Has mastered the courtesies involved in living happily with others.

"(g) Is quick to appreciate the efforts and contributions of other members of the group.

"(h) Realizes that his own personal development is the greatest contribution that he can make to the group, and accords every other member of the group the right to develop in his own way.

"(i) Analyzes situations and makes choices with understanding and with consideration for the welfare of others.

"(j) Uses the contributions of his groups to advance his own plans for wholesome development.

"9. Aesthetic activities: Every child—

"(a) Has good taste.

"(b) Has an intelligent interest in art, literature, music, and drama.

"(c) Has an understanding of those arts as major factors in the evolution of civilization.

"(d) Has an appreciation of the aesthetic arts, and within his capacity expresses himself through several media.

"(e) Likes to read literature, visit exhibitions of art, attend the theater, and listen to musical programs.

"10. Religious activities: While it is the obligation of the church and not the function of the public schools to give religious instruction, every child should—

"(a) Respect religious ideals.

"(b) Perceive the influence of religious thought in civilization.

"Part II: Groups of personality traits—

"1. Intelligence: Resourcefulness, brightness, keenness, discrimination, objectivity, ability to plan, foresight.

"2. Honesty: Fairness, justice, integrity, open-mindedness, tolerance, sincerity.

"3. Friendliness: Courtesy, kindness, neighborliness, generosity, sympathy, understanding.

"4. Efficiency: Accuracy, skill, carefulness, neatness, speed.

"5. Cooperativeness: Self-control, teamwork, dependability, responsibility, tact.

"6. Forcefulness: Initiative, drive, persistence, confidence, industry, concentration, courage, enthusiasm, ambition."

The outcomes have been stated in two forms in order to clarify two important aspects of the problem. While a casual reading might suggest that either form is complete in itself, a critical study will show that each part supplements the other.

Part I indicates the approach to the problem. Character develops through experience. The outcomes suggested in part I focus attention on the growth of children through participation in the varied activities of the school. Part I becomes a basis for constructing and evaluating a school program. The inadequacy of this analysis of the fields of experience lies in the fact that it does not clearly define the ultimate goals of character education. Unless those responsible for the school program have these generalized ideals constantly in mind, the possibilities inherent in school situations cannot be realized.

Part II is a statement of goals. Groups of personality traits have been utilized since the beginnings of recorded time to designate certain desirable behavior patterns. These concepts are based on racial experience. They are familiar and convenient statements of our ideals. Used as an approach to the problem of character education, traits tend to become platitudes because generalizations have meaning only in relation to the experiences from which they are drawn. Abstract concepts have no meaning for children except as they may be led to make their own generalizations on the basis of their own experiences, deriving their own concepts and ideals as their predecessors have done. Used as outcomes by which to check the school program, such concepts have real and permanent value to all concerned with the educational process.

Those who are participating in the character-education experiment in Washington are clearly of the opinion that our program of individualized instruction based on the individual interests, needs, and capacities of children, will make inevitable a reorganization of the program of studies and activities in the various levels of the school system. However, such curriculum reorganization must await the accumulation of adequate information concerning individual pupils. The officers and teachers in charge will be continuously aware of this problem and will accumulate information from time to time which will be used in its ultimate solution.

METHODS OF TEACHING

Character education and training is an individual matter. Methods of teaching must recognize the individual child, his needs, capacities, and interests. The teacher must be a teacher of children rather than merely of subjects.

Individualized education is one of the major considerations in the character-education experiment in Washington. We are emphasizing the facts that the whole personality of the child, intellectual, aesthetic, social, physical, moral, etc., is involved in his education; that the development of social and moral qualities is as important as the development of intellectual qualities represented by the acquisition of information; and that the extra-school life and home conditions of the child must be taken into consideration by the school if the school is to be reasonably successful in the development and training of the child.

In the Washington experiment we recognize that the reeducation of teachers to these newer points of view is one of the major tasks of those in charge of the experiment. Through the leadership of the principal, through the work of the counselors, through the supervision and direction of the assistant superintendent in charge of the experiment, and through systematic courses, which it is hoped will be offered in the local universities, it is hoped that prompt and satisfactory progress will be made in giving teachers and officers and all others connected with the experiment, a thoroughgoing knowledge of the basic principles involved in these newer views of the educational process, and the morale necessary for the success of the experiment.

The summer conference worked out the following criteria by which teachers might judge whether or not their instruction could be characterized as individualized instruction. These criteria were stated in the form of questions as follows:

1. Is your objective the improvement of the individual as a social being?
2. Is the pupil successful in doing what has been assigned to him? Does the child realize that he is successful, and does he get that satisfaction which comes only from success?
3. Is the pupil really interested in what he is doing and satisfied by doing it?
4. Does the pupil work aggressively without external compulsion?
5. Is your prescription based upon sufficient information regarding the abilities, interests, and needs of the pupil as a social being?
6. Do you recognize that your prescriptions are instrumental and provisional rather than objectives made and handed down which must be achieved at all cost?
7. Does your prescription take account of extraschool influences upon the learning habits of your pupils?
8. Is your judgment of the success of the pupil based upon what you think the pupil can do, or is it a mass standard?

ADMINISTRATION

We have shown how the character-education experiment in Washington is likely to affect our conception of the philosophy of education, the program of studies, and training, educational outcomes, and methods of teaching. The philosophy underlying the Washington experiment in character education is likely also to affect the organization and administration of the school system.

In Washington we look upon the problem of organization and administration of the schools as a problem primarily concerned with establishing the most favorable conditions under which the educational process may be carried on. Obviously, if established rules and regulations do not promote conditions favorable for classroom instruction and the achievement of worthy educational outcomes, then those rules and regulations should be modified.

The administrative and supervisory officers in Washington pride themselves in following a cooperative procedure in the handling of all administrative and supervisory problems. They have adopted many provisions looking toward flexibility in the organization and administration of the schools. A large amount of freedom and initiative is reposed in the principals of buildings and, in general, a decentralized rather than a centralized plan of school administration for the city is in operation.

At the summer institute on character education, the members of the conference worked out a list of 30 or more evidences of flexibility and adaptation in the organization and operation of the schools.

The following subjects were listed as evidence of flexibility in the administration of the schools: Promotion by subjects, an open list of textbooks, credit for approved outside work, individual freedom in teaching methods, limited requirements specified for graduation, and semiannual promotions. These are typical illustrations of an attempt to allow freedom to administrative and supervisory officers to operate their schools in the interests of individual children.

Some examples of the adaptation of school organization to the needs of individual pupils are: Homogeneous grouping of pupils, course of study modifications, elective subjects in the senior high schools and to some extent in the junior high schools, special classes for various types of pupils, and special schools, such as trade schools, technical schools, and commercial high schools.

These observations are presented without any possibility of their amplification in this paper. They are presented only as evidence of the fact that the administrative and supervisory officers in Washington are aware of the important problem confronting them of undertaking to modify administrative practices in school organization and administration to the end that individualized instruction shall be encouraged.

CUMULATIVE-RECORD CARD

If individualized instruction is to prevail, if courses of study and methods of teaching are to be adapted to the individual needs of boys and girls, and if the educational outcomes to be desired are to be individualized, officers and teachers must have a larger amount of information concerning boys and girls than has heretofore formed the basis for the establishment of our educational practices. It ought to be obvious to everyone that the educational process cannot be made to fit the individual child unless we know all of the facts about that child that condition his learning. We have set for ourselves the task of accumulating for every child all available information that is related to his education and training.

As a means of recording some of this information we have adopted the cumulative record cards for elementary, junior, and senior high schools prepared and published by the American Council on Education. On this card will be reported not merely the child's progress in mastery of subject matter from year to year, but also an unusual amount of information regarding his extracurricular activities and his character traits.

In addition, each teacher will be expected from time to time to submit to the school office a report on significant character traits as she has observed them. There will also be available for the use of the principal of the school and the counselor the intelligence quotients, and the results of achievement tests for all pupils. In addition, our research departments will make clinical examinations of special cases. We propose also to make a clinical study of every pupil who gives any evidence of juvenile delinquency. In this study we shall have the cooperation of the juvenile court, the police department, and the various social agencies dealing with juvenile delinquency.

While the character-education program is intended primarily as a preventive measure against juvenile delinquency, a thoroughgoing clinical study of every case of juvenile delinquency will be not only necessary in the handling of such cases but the results of such study will furnish much information which will be of value to the officers for general use.

SUMMARY

The Washington experiment in character education requires a shift of emphasis in our educational thinking, from subject matter to be taught to the development of personalities in those being taught. This change of point of view respecting the educational process must necessarily be gradual because it involves a reeducation of the present members of the teaching profession, not only in the purpose of education but in subject matter and in methods of instruction. As instruction becomes more individualized, the individual needs, capacities, and future careers of young people may be more clearly and more definitely provided for insofar as systematic education is concerned.

The final success or failure of the experiment will depend, to a large degree, on the success of the teacher in the classroom in putting into effect a modified philosophy of education and a modified technique in teaching; on the success of the officers in exercising a helpful leadership in the project and in establishing as favorable an administrative situation as possible for the experiment; and from the encouragement of an informed professional and public opinion. The full measure of the success or failure of the experiment can be observed only in terms of the character and conduct produced in the young people who participate in the experiment, observed years hence when these same young people are the citizens of a new social order in which better living conditions abound, happier individual lives are lived, and a higher degree of social justice prevails.

REPORT OF THE GUIDANCE PROGRAM OF MCKINLEY HIGH SCHOOL FOR 1933–34

By Irene T. Blythe

In the fall of 1933, the principals of McKinley High School, recognizing that responsibility for guidance had become a vital part of secondary education, instituted a guidance program.

Because of the varied curriculum at McKinley, and the wide spread of individual differences, the need for guidance in this school seemed to be particularly urgent.

Having recognized this need, the principals set about the organization of a guidance staff by coordinating existing committees, and adding new personnel. The guidance staff, as finally organized, consisted of a chairman of guidance, a third semester counselor, an adjustment committee, a college committee, a placement bureau, and a student advisory board with a faculty adviser.

Before this staff was organized, only such guidance was attempted as could be done during the opening period by the section teachers, with the exception of maladjusted cases which were referred to the adjustment clinic. The new set-up was not meant to supersede this work of the section teachers, but to supplement it.

Three vital phases of guidance—personality adjustments, educational guidance, and vocational guidance—were undertaken by this staff. The objectives were to provide each student with a program adapted to his or her ability and planned toward a definite end, i. e., either college entrance, some trade skill, or a thorough business training; and, to adjust each pupil so that he should have a happy and profitable high-school experience that would lead to a permanent adjustment to life.

Each member of the staff assumed a definite responsibility, as follows:

Beginning with the second semester, the third-semester counselor, assisted by two other teachers on the guidance staff, interviewed each third-semester student, a total of 375 personal interviews. During these interviews an effort was made to discover the interests, aptitudes, and desires of each student, and to arrange his program of curricular and extracurricular activities to utilize and develop his talents to the best advantage to himself and to the school and society. In addition to the regular interviews, the third-semester counselor visited the homes of several maladjusted students in an effort to bring about a closer cooperation between school and home.

The college committee functions both as an advisory and a certification committee. Approximately 165 third-semester students, who had expressed an interest in going to college, were referred to this committee by the third-semester counselor. The college committee planned a definite college-preparatory program for each student. In addition, 75 upper-semester students were referred to this committee by the student advisory board. Many students sought the advice of the college committee of their own accord.

The adjustment committee handled maladjusted cases referred to them. In this work they were assisted by the Child Guidance Clinic and Dr. Gilbert, of Gallinger Hospital. This committee provided for 20 third-semester assemblies for the purpose of school orientation and vocational guidance.

The placement bureau, composed of a chairman from the business department, a teacher from the home-economics department, and a teacher from the shops, assumed responsibility for the distributive phase of guidance for graduates and some other students. Letters to parents of Tech students, alumni, and employers brought in employment calls. Grants of money from the P. T. A., the alumni, the seniors, and the Phoebe Hearst Foundation financed the placement bureau. Fifty students were placed before June 8, 1934. More students will be placed as soon as they are graduated.

The chairman of guidance, who is also faculty adviser to the student advisory board, with the assistance of the Vocational Guidance Association, the Kiwanis Club, and the Y. M. C. A., arranged 2 guidance assemblies and 35 vocational talks for seniors and fourth-semester students. The attendance at these talks averaged 125. A survey of the occupational choices of seniors was made and the results used in arranging the vocational talks and in compiling for the public library a list of occupations of interest to Washington high-school students.

Forty-one vocational interviews with Washington leaders in the professions and trades were arranged for seniors requesting them.

Other guidance activities of the student advisory board included the interviewing of 15 maladjusted students, the drawing up of a school code for voluntary signature of all students, and the conducting of the third-semester orientation assemblies. The chairman of guidance worked with each member of the guidance staff in carrying out the special work assumed by the individual members.

To assist in carrying out the various plans, 20 blank forms, letters, questionnaires, and so forth, were printed through the courtesy of the printing department. The third-semester questionnaire and cumulative-record envelop furnished the basis for the complete record of each student. These records, which are to be added to each semester, will be filed in the office of the placement bureau when the student is graduated.

Many other school organizations cooperated in the guidance program. The Tech librarian established a special shelf of guidance books and pamphlets. The faculty adviser of the school paper arranged for a series of vocational articles to be published in Tech Life. At a conference held with the chief librarian of the District, the facilities of the public library were offered for the use of students seeking occupational information.

It is hoped that it may be possible next year to extend this guidance work to more students and to better adapt it to the needs of McKinley High School.

CHARACTER EDUCATION

The superintendent of schools in New York City expresses a thought in his annual report that must run through the minds of many persons who see innovations that were scarcely dreamed of a few years ago appearing in the educational system. "Is our youth today so weak", he asks, "that he will fall easily into crime or delinquency if school is not nicely adjusted to his tastes?"

The question is of particular interest to Washingtonians who have heard much recently of the so-called "character education" experiment being conducted in certain schools of the District.

Inadequate or improper schooling is closely related to delinquency. Warden Lawes, of Sing Sing, in studying the records of 500 convicts, found that 225 left school before completing the sixth grade, 111 finished grammar school, 71 went to high school for a single year, 22 were graduated from high school, and only 5 finished college.

Schooling is not, of course, a guaranty of good citizenship. But it may be a powerful influence in the development of character, insofar as it means a trained supervision during the formative period. Perhaps the most pungent criticism of the schools today is that they have failed to fill in the gap left by the disintegration of the modern family.

It is no surprise to learn from recent surveys that more and more women are deserting their hearthstones for the field of business, either under stress of the depression or because of a more liberal concept of woman's place in modern life. In such circumstances, the influence of the home is necessarily weakened. Children are likely to grow up without having the principles of virtue and diligence instilled into their consciousness. Forward-looking educators are attempting to supplant this deficiency by character training in the schools.

There is no set curriculum in character education, no textbooks, no special classes, no apparent difference from any other program. But efforts are being made to gage the capabilities of children and to assist them in the fortification of their weak points. These incipient weaknesses may result from malnourishment, physical defects, emotional quirks, mild complexes, or even home conditions.

It is not a case of catering to a child's weaknesses nor, as the New York educator suggests, a case of "putting him on a diet of educational milk-toast." It is an intelligent effort to apply modern knowledge of social and physical science, to keep pace with the demands of the day. While still in the experimental stage, if early indications are fulfilled, these new educational trends will do much to promote the development of those robust qualities characteristic of the best type of American citizen.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address delivered in my home city of Topeka, Kans., December 11, 1934, by Frank N. Belgrano, Jr., national commander of the American Legion. The address is well worth the careful attention of the Senate and the country and contains an unusually clear and logical presentation of the case in favor of the immediate cash payment of the veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates.

I also wish to repeat at this time that I am in favor of immediate cash payment of these adjusted-service certificates and hope to have the opportunity of casting my vote for immediate payment at a very early date in the session.

I send the address to the desk with the request that it be printed as a part of my remarks at this time.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My fellow Americans, for this splendid tribute I express to you the sincere thanks and gratitude of the entire American Legion. It is a rare privilege and a high honor to speak to a gathering of such outstanding citizens. You are business men of America. I am one of you. We speak the same language, and therefore I am sure we shall understand one another. It is a business matter that I want to discuss with you here—a business that is of vital importance to every American citizen, whatever may be his field of activity.

When I became national commander of the American Legion, I did not cease to be a business man. The Legion is a business. Ours is the duty of striving with all of our strength, in all of our thoughts, to safeguard and perpetuate the principles of true Americanism; to work without rest to make this a land of peace and contentment for all citizens who cherish the name "America." That is the greatest business any group of sincere citizens can undertake.

The average business man, the average citizen, knows little about the extensive work of the Legion. Because it can be made to sound more sensational in headlines, you know that we recommend immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates, commonly misnamed the "bonus." You also know that we have demanded, and will continue to demand, the adoption of an adequate Federal program for the care of our World War comrades who sacrificed their health and their future in defense of our country.

But our vast Americanism program, our child-welfare work, and our contributions to high community service do not seem to make sensational news, and therefore the average citizen knows little about them. I am grateful to you for this opportunity to discuss with you the American Legion's entire field of endeavor.

It is not my nature to dodge issues. Therefore, I shall speak first about the subject of our program which has excited the most controversy. It is the question of paying the adjusted-service certificates or, if you prefer, the bonus. At our convention at Miami we adopted by an overwhelming vote a resolution which said that since the Federal Government is embarked upon a program of spending tremendous sums, we recommend the immediate cash payment of these certificates as an effective relief measure and an effective means of further hastening recovery without adding to the national debt.

I have said it before, and I repeat it here, that I stand squarely behind that resolution, and in doing so I do not have to compromise with my business conscience. From the day we were mustered out of service, following that great conflict which history knows as the World War, the representatives of the people of these United States, in Congress assembled, determined that as a matter of common justice some adjustment in compensation had to be made to those who rendered service in the armed forces of the Nation. Year after year, from that day on, this question was the subject for continuous debate in the Halls of Congress. Prolonged talk over the method for meeting this recognized obligation finally terminated when the Sixty-eighth Congress, in May 1924, enacted the law known as the "World War Compensation Act." To correct the injustices to service men during the World War, Congress decided not to pay us then, but 20 years later. The World War Compensation Act authorized the issuance of certificates providing additional compensation of $1 for each day of service in the United States, and $1.25 for each day of foreign service, with interest to date of maturity. These certificates became effective as of January 1, 1925, and were payable at face value in 1945.

The majority of World War veterans never ceased to believe that Congress should have definitely settled this admitted debt at the time the law was enacted. But on numerous occasions in recent years we of the Legion declined to press our case in a patriotic effort to help the Federal Government balance its Budget. Times, however, have changed.

As an expedient for hastening recovery, for priming the machinery of business, and for meeting relief requirements, our Government is spending billions of dollars. Under these circumstances we of the Legion say that now, if ever, is the time to pay a debt It will have to be paid, so why not now, when prodigious spending is the governmental policy? Why add to the national debt when the same purpose can be served by paying off a debt? I submit that thought to you as a matter of sound business.

Now right here I want to make one point very clear. Let no man misunderstand my position. I do not say that the Government's policy is right or wrong. Politics will have no place in my administration as national commander of the American Legion. My sole object is to present to you, as concisely as I can, the Legion's case in asking the Government to discharge this debt immediately as part of its program for relief and economic reconstruction.

A better vehicle for this purpose cannot be found. Does anyone think the veterans will put this money in a sock and keep it there? If they do, they know nothing of the desperate conditions of hundreds of thousands of veterans. This money will be used to pay necessary bills at the corner grocery store, it will help to pay rents that are long past due, it will go to hard-pressed merchants to discharge the accounts of harder-pressed veterans, it will find its way quickly into every channel of business and trade. If you need new financial stimulus, here is a method for getting it without creating more debt.

I am conscious that some business men will say that we are not entitled to the interest on our certificates. Look back at the time these promissory notes were pledged. The dollar then was a hundred cents dollar. On the lowered dollar value of today we are asking no more than that to which we are entitled. This whole question is misunderstood, because it has been a political football for years, and it is high time to take it out of politics permanently.

The press has been filled with offers of a compromise. My answer to that is short and brief. There is no compromise to make. I have a mandate from the organization I have the honor to lead. I shall follow it to the letter. It is not the side which feels that its cause is righteous that comes forward with offers of an armistice. It invariably is the side that knows its cause is lost. We have made to the Government a common-sense business proposition. I believe the country will support it and the Government will adopt it.

When it comes to the question of protecting disabled veterans and providing care for their dependents, I compromise with no man. We of the Legion say first that this is a solemn obligation of the Federal Government, not of the States or the local communities, and certainly not a problem for private charity. The sacrifice these men made was for the whole Nation. Now, because of their sacrifice, these veterans are in need, and it is the whole country's duty to respond generously.

In our convention at Chicago a year ago we laid down a program of adequate care for all disabled veterans, a program that is fair to the country without being unfair to the veterans. We called it the "four-point program." Congress passed legislation last winter making effective the first three points. There remains the fourth point, stating that the widows and children of deceased veterans shall not be without governmental protection. We advocate this protection only when dependents of deceased veterans are in need, and I am sure no good citizen will argue with us the right of this position.

The American Legion seeks only to restore to productivity as far as possible maimed and sickened bodies among the 5 percent of us who were tolled off to do the fighting for the rest of us. This principle, with minor variations, has been America's policy since 1636. We do not seek to place soldiers in a more elevated position than the honorable one they occupy in the hearts of the American people. The Legion merely bends its efforts to restore levels disturbed by war and its collaterals.

This is an unselfish service. There are some who from selfish motives would have you believe that we seek these benefits for ourselves; that the Legion lives to obtain Treasury drafts for its own membership. In the first place, the services of our rehabilitation division are open to any veteran of the World War. We do not permit solicitation of membership among veterans who come to us for advice or assistance in connection with their claims.

Now, in the language of business, let us examine the other side of the ledger. In a brief way, I have endeavored to show you that the things we ask of the Government are only those things we believe veterans are entitled to have. But what do we contribute to the welfare of our country? We give it the same kind of service in peace that we gave in war. That is a service that cannot be measured in terms of dollars and cents. It cannot be bought! It springs from that same fountain of devotion which inspired us when we dropped our civilian vocations and left our classrooms to fight for the flag we all love. I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Legion is the greatest patriotic organization in our country today.

In the American Legion, duty to God and country comes first. I wish that was true of all of our citizens. As a business man I am far less concerned about economic conditions, unsettled as they are, than the apathetic attitude of many of our citizens toward an enemy that has stolen into our gates unseen. It is a menace to the progress of our country and a threat to our American Government. I refer to the invading army of alien "ism", a force that has grown so strong that it now boldly proclaims its un-American tenets publicly.

In the Legion there is only one "ism." That is Americanism. We hold that there is no room for any other "ism" in America, and we are mobilized to a man to fight for that principle, to safeguard for posterity the high ideals which have given us on this continent the greatest Nation of free people under the sun. We do not say that government is static, nor that all progress ended a century and a half ago. We do say, without equivocation, that we shall continue to progress, as we have in the past, as Americans, and in our own American way. That is an ideal to which every true American can affirm unflinching allegiance without interfering with his individual political views or religious creed.

Our convention in Miami adopted a number of resolutions, all of which shall have equal standing and importance as my mandates this year. But there was one which stated that Americanism should be our primary activity in 1934. In accepting that mandate I want you to know that I shall keep foremost the need for pure Americanism as the keynote of our endeavors. And because I hope to have the earnest support of every patriotic citizen in that work, I think you who are not members of our organization should know what the Legion means by Americanism.

First, it means love of country above all else. In the preamble of our Constitution we associated ourselves together "for God and country." That fortress we shall hold to the last man. Next, we stand for equal rights, personal liberty, freedom of speech, and the right of every citizen to worship God according to his own belief. We hold that a strong, healthy childhood today means a strong, healthy America tomorrow. To that end we stand for full educational opportunities, proper instruction in good sportsmanship, and careful guidance in the building of alert minds and healthy bodies. We hold that un-American and subversive influences must be driven from our institutions of learning, high and low. We demand the eradication of these influences wherever they are found. We stand for community service in its highest forms. We stand for law observance and law enforcement. We stand for international understanding without entangling alliances. We hold that in America, American citizens should come first. And we stand for unqualified allegiance to the flag that is our ideal and our hope.

The American Legion is an organization of action. We do not preach these things and forget them. We work for them and fight for them. No part of our program is more deserving of public recognition than our activities in the field of child welfare. Through our National Child Welfare Committee and our 11,000 posts, we are fighting in Congress, the State legislatures, and the municipal councils for the adoption of adequate laws to protect American childhood against exploitation. We are putting our full strength behind the movement for immediate ratification of a constitutional amendment permanently outlawing child labor. Nor do our child-welfare interests end there.

Throughout this land there are thousands upon thousands of children, the dependents and orphans of World War veterans, who are in need. They cannot wait for cities, States, or Nation to pass laws for their protection. They must be fed, clothed, and sheltered. The American Legion is undertaking to do just that for these children. In order to meet this deserving need we established an endowment fund of $5,000,000. One-half of the income from this endowment is devoted to child welfare. In this year of great need, every penny of the amount allocated to child welfare, estimated at $82,300, will be spent for direct aid for the orphans and needy children of World War veterans. Not a dollar of it will be used for salaries, administration, or any other purpose but the feeding and care of suffering children. The Legion will assume all costs for overhead out of its income from membership dues.

Supplementing this fund for direct aid will be $18,000 from the Forty and Eight, the Legion's fun and honor society, and $3,000 from the Eight and Forty, the fun and honor society of the American Legion Auxiliary. So, if the need be established, this year our child-welfare division will have a total of $103,300 for direct relief. This is an increase of $34,300 over last year. The individual relief work of the State departments and posts of the Legion and the auxiliary will increase this sum materially. In the Legion year just closed our known distribution of direct financial aid was $713,798.91, and if complete statistical reports were available from all of our posts and department units it is estimated that this amount could be more accurately stated as $1,000,000. The known financial aid rendered met the essential needs of about 215,385 children.

For educational and legislative work in connection with our child-welfare program in various States, the auxiliary has contributed $10,000, and in addition to the $18,000 for direct relief from the Forty and Eight, that splendid organization is appropriating sufficient money to pay the necessary expenses of conferences in various parts of the country by those interested in our child-welfare work.

Our Americanism program also recognizes that youth activities must be properly guided. If our Nation and our form of government is to survive we must consider today what kind of citizens we shall have tomorrow. The American Legion is considering that vital question. In every community in the country you will find Legion posts promoting interest in healthful outdoor activities, coaching junior baseball teams, organizing Boy Scout troops, and teaching our adolescents the meaning of good sportsmanship and good citizenship through those mediums which appeal to youth.

In recent years the American school system suffered dangerous curtailments because of depression-inspired economies in State and municipal governments. They would have suffered more if it had not been for the Legion. Henceforth, they shall suffer much less if the Legion has any influence at all. One of the last things that should feel the knife of economy is the public school. Some things can wait but childhood cannot wait. The months lost from the classrooms now are lost for good. Last year thousands of schools were kept going because legionnaires went to their aid. The National Education Association awarded certificates of honor to more than a thousand Legion posts for their outstanding accomplishments in this crisis. We are determined as a united organization that this year there shall be no maldistribution of economy at the expense of the schools.

In demanding an adequate national defense and the enactment of a universal service law we of the Legion are fighting the battle of every American citizen. We can all agree that war is a crime against enlightened civilization; but no good citizen can agree that America shall remain unprepared as long as the spirit of war and conquest flames abroad. We demand an adequate national defense not to foster war but to promote peace. America never will seek a war, but an unarmed America invites attack. The progress of science has ended our day of splendid isolation, if it ever existed.

Our national defense program embraces only minimum requirements for the protection of our shores and our commerce. For the Navy we demand the immediate construction of every ship authorized by the London Treaty, and the men to man them; for the Army, sufficient strength to guarantee that no enemy force ever shall set foot on American soil, with a National Guard and Reserve to form the nucleus of a citizen army in time of war; and an adequate air defense of our coasts and possessions, with the necessary personnel, modern equipment and reserves for that vital purpose.

We of the Legion are ever ready to lend our strength to every honorable and sincere movement in the direction of international good will and peace. Our proposal for a universal service law is a step in that direction. The Legion plan provides for the conscription of capital, industry, and man power in time of war, and the use of each in the service of the Nation without special preference or profit. In effect, we propose to take the profit out of war. That is one example the United States can set for the rest of the world without impairing our ability to defend ourselves if war is forced upon us. When war becomes a profitless business war will cease to exist.

My fellow countrymen, travel the length and breadth of this Nation and wherever you go there you will find the good works of the Legion. You will find legionnaires rendering service in its highest forms—you will see community houses, parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, athletic fields, all built by legionnaires. You will find our men carrying relief to the needy and enlightenment to the unschooled. In time of disaster your legionnaires are ever ready, ever willing. We continue to serve; we always shall.

Honest men can have an intelligent difference of opinion. All men do not agree with all things. We do not expect everyone to agree with all of our policies. We shall fight for them because we are convinced they are just. But in our efforts to perpetuate the ideals and institutions of America, in our program to promote those things which will make this a happier land for all citizens, in our demand for a proper national defense, we have a right to expect the whole-hearted support of every loyal citizen. We invite that support and cooperation from you in the fulfillment of this great program.

PRINTING IN THE RECORD

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request just made; but I venture to call the attention of the Senate to the cost of putting matter into the RECORD. We are encumbering the RECORD, and have gotten in the habit of putting in it everything that is offered here by any Senator. It costs $45 a page to print material in the RECORD; and I ask Senators not to burden the RECORD with material that is not pertinent to pending legislation or otherwise helpful.

I take it that the matter presented at this time applies to pending legislation, and I shall not object to having it printed; but I desire to call attention to the expense involved, because we have gotten in the habit of offering matter to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which is very costly and often does not do any good.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the resolution adopted by the Joint Committee on Printing on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
Washington, April 26, 1934.

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Under authority of section 13 of the Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895 (sec. 181, title 44, U. S. C., p. 1426), the Joint Committee on Printing at a meeting held this day adopted the following resolutions with reference to the printing of public documents and extraneous matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS

Resolved by the Joint Committee on Printing, That the attention of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be invited to the following provisions of law relating to orders for the printing of House and Senate documents and that they be requested to cause compliance therewith:

1. Either House may order the printing of a document not already provided for by law, but only when the same shall be accompanied by an estimate from the Public Printer as to the probable cost thereof. Any executive department, bureau, board, or independent office of the Government submitting reports or documents in response to inquiries from Congress shall submit therewith an estimate of the probable cost of printing to the usual number. Nothing in this section relating to estimates shall apply to reports or documents not exceeding 50 pages (sec. 140, title 44, U. S. C., p. 1423).

2. Printing and binding for Congress, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing of either House, shall be so recommended in a report containing an approximate estimate of the cost thereof, together with a statement from the Public Printer of estimated approximate cost of work previously ordered by Congress, within the fiscal year (sec. 145, title 44, U. S. C., p. 1424).

3. Resolutions for printing extra copies, when presented to either House, shall be referred immediately to the Committee on Printing who, in making their report, shall give the probable cost of the proposed printing upon the estimate of the Public Printer; and no extra copies shall be printed before such committee has reported (sec. 133, title 44, U. S. C., p. 1423).

Resolved further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to return to the respective House for further consideration all orders for printing that are not made in compliance with the foregoing provisions of law, accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof together with a statement of the estimated approximate cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year.

PRINTING IN THE RECORD

Whereas section 13 of the Printing Act of January 12, 1895 (sec 181, title 44, S. S. C., p. 1426), provides that, while the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall be substantially a verbatim report of the proceedings, the Joint Committee on Printing "shall take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk", and

Whereas the act of March 1, 1919 (sec. 4, title 44, U. S. C., p. 1415), provides that the Joint Committee on Printing shall have power to adopt and employ such measures as, in its discretion, may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect, delay, duplication, or waste in the public printing and binding, and the distribution of Government publications; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Joint Committee on Printing, That, in order to reduce unnecessary bulk and to prevent delay in the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and to remedy waste in the appropriations for printing and binding, no extraneous matter in excess of two pages in any one instance may be printed in the CON-GRESSIONAL RECORD by a Member under leave to print or to extend his remarks, unless the same is accompanied by an estimate from the Public Printer of the probable cost thereof, but this restriction shall not apply to communications from State legislatures, addresses, or articles by the President and the members of his Cabinet, the Vice President, or a Member of Congress. The Public Printer is hereby directed to return to the respective House any matter submitted for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which is in contravention of this resolution and to comply with the provisions herein.

Respectfully,

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Chairman.

ADDRESS BY DONALD RICHBERG RELATIVE TO RECOVERY MEASURES

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender and ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the address of Hon. Donald Richberg, Executive Director of the National Emergency Council, Town Hall, Washington, D. C., January 6, 1935, touching the bills that are now presented before the Senate under the designation of recovery measures.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As the story appears in the Old Testament there were three afflictions visited upon Job. First, there came a depression which made him poor; second, came boils which made him ill; and finally, came three friendly economists who nearly drove him insane explaining that it was good for him to suffer and that any complaint or effort to change conditions showed a lack of faith in the wisdom and justice of the Almighty.

There is a very long and interesting debate recorded between Job and the three economists which Job won by a very clever strategy. First he asked three questions which no economist has ever been able to answer:

1. "How hast thou helped him that is without power?"
2. "How savest thou the arm that hath no strength?"
3. "How hast thou counseled him that hath no wisdom?"

Then he completed the rout of his opponents by praying that the Almighty would answer him directly, and that his adversary would write a book.

Of course, as soon as the economists started writing books, it became evident to any man with a logical mind, like Elihu, the lawyer, that they had no answers for Job's questions. It was also made clear that they had no remedy for the depression or the boils—in fact they didn't know what had caused either one. Yet they condemned Job, not because he didn't try to cure himself, but because he didn't cheerfully accept depressions and boils as inevitable products of economic laws which were decreed by the inscrutable wisdom of the Creator and well understood by all sound economists.

This attitude of Job's self-righteous friends kindled the wrath of Elihu, who was also annoyed at Job for trying to justify his own do-nothing policy, instead of justifying the Lord for letting things happen to a man who wouldn't help himself, who just tore his clothes, shaved his head, and sat in the ashes scraping his skin.

So Elihu, like a good lawyer, reproved his client vigorously for not recognizing that the laws were just and the administration of justice was perfect and that as a good citizen he should not complain or criticize the law. If Job were energetic and resourceful he would go to work making new laws and interpreting old laws, so that not only would the law be perfect and just but also it would help him to get rid of depressions and boils and to make money and enjoy good health.

About this time, when Job must have been considerably confused by all the economic and legal advice he had been getting, a voice came out of the whirlwind and said:

"Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou Me."

And then a revelation came to Job of the vastness of life and its possibilities and of the tremendous achievements of mankind which cannot be prognosticated or explained by thousands of volumes of dry statistics and dull theorizing—deeds which are inspired by the great gift of imagination and accomplished by the courage and faith and comradeship which clothe human efforts with the dignity of a purpose that may be called divine.

In the light of this revelation Job bowed down before his Creator, saying: "I know that Thou canst do everything." There might have come to Job in that moment the vision of a long line of future economists who, generation after generation, would seek to prove that things could not happen which were going to happen or had already happened, and to prove that the ordained way of life must continue to be cruel and mean and selfish because they had not the imagination with which to see how the world could change and how things which were wrong today could be made right tomorrow.

Anyhow it is recorded that Job repented of having talked so much about things he did not understand and about things that were, as he said, "too wonderful for me." He girded up his loins and worked his way out of the depression. The economists made a burnt offering of their books, which were poetically described as seven bulls and seven rams. Job prayed for them and under divine inspiration he established the Job Foundation for Economic Research—so that his adversaries could go on writing books. And with that gentle humor which even survived boils and depressions he had engraved above the entrance: "No doubt but ye are the people; and wisdom shall die with you."

What a beautiful lesson has been written in the Book of Job for those wise men of every age who, always pointing out what is wrong and never finding out what is right, "darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge."

Two years ago the people of the United States were coasting down the road to ruin. Industry was stagnant, agriculture was prostrate, our banking system was on the verge of collapse. There was intolerable unemployment, which had been increasing for years. Uncounted millions of our people were destitute and had already suffered or were facing loss of homes and every other hold upon economic security.

Of what value were constitutional guaranties of liberty to citizens denied an opportunity to earn a living? Of what value were the protections of law and order to those who had no property and no means of livelihood to be protected? It was becoming apparent to millions of long-suffering men and women that a government must do more than merely preserve an existing order; that it must do more than merely sanction whatever economic system happened to develop. A government must make sure that a sound economic system is developed, because the political freedom and security of a people depend upon their economic freedom and security.

The national administration, coming into power in the spring of 1933, was compelled to find quick measures of relief from dangers which were not underestimated then by those most anxious to belittle and to forget them now. It was necessary to act at once to change conditions for which there were no precedents, by methods for which there could be no precedents.

The same combination of destructive forces had brought about a political revolution in many other nations and thereby had created a military dictatorship through which an economic order could be reestablished. The supreme problem in America less than 2 years ago was to find the means of exerting a political power great enough to control the forces of disintegration while still preserving the fundamental principles and processes of self-government.

In the histories of the future how little argument will survive over the merits and demerits of every action taken, every device employed, every Federal agency created in the spring of 1933. How petty will appear in retrospect the partisan attacks and smart witticisms of clever and learned critics, in contrast with the gigantic fact that America rose out of the depths of the depression with practically no civil disorder and with the governments of the States and the United States still functioning under their constitutional safeguards of individual liberty and social security.

There is the record of a civic victory which, in the long view of history, will loom greater than most of the triumphs of military genius on the decisive battlefields of the world. Today we are handicapped in many ways in any effort to appraise the value of the recovery program. In the first place, it is difficult for human beings to measure the worth of men or policies near at hand.

As Gerald Massey wrote:

"To those who walk beside them, great men seem Mere common earth; but distance makes them stars."

In the same way laws and political policies need time and distance, and aging to acquire the power and majesty of noble institutions. A good many harsh things were said by highly intelligent people about the Constitution of the United States when it was first submitted for approval and while it was being subjected to various explanations and interpretations by its sponsors.

Indeed, the Supreme Court of the United States and a great many other courts have been busily interpreting provisions of that Constitution for nearly 150 years, and nobody is quite sure what they all mean, even now. So perhaps the fact that section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act has had to be interpreted somewhat frequently in the last year only indicates that in time this brief statement of a profoundly important principle may be as well understood and enforced as the constitutional guaranty of "due process of law."

The gravest difficulty, however, in a contemporaneous appraisal of the recovery program lies in the effort to evaluate each new Federal agency and each separate policy of each agency by itself; and in the confessed inability of most critics even to see the program as a whole. The plain fact is that there are so many factors involved in the reconstruction of a political economic system that it is impossible to plan and administer a host of activities so that every effort will be in harmony with a cooperative advance all along the line.

The separate objectives of a thousand pressure groups within our own borders, the influence upon our domestic economy of the failures and successes of industrial and political programs of other nations, all produce kaleidoscopic changes in the economic pattern from day to day—which would make a mockery of any plans of recovery and reconstruction which might be prepared with the scientific precision of an engineer's blueprint.

The present administration recognized on the one hand the futility of continuing a wishful reliance on laissez faire, and on the other hand the folly of trying to plan in advance all the details of a national progress through a maze of ever-changing conditions to a predetermined goal. As in every era, when delayed evolution accumulates the speed and confusion of revolution, the master of public affairs has been found in the man who does not fear to do the first things first, and to adopt the obvious common-sense remedy for an obvious evil, without waiting for erudite scholars and cautious statesmen to perfect a complete and consistent program of political economy, which human wisdom cannot devise and human ability cannot execute.

Over 70 years ago a great President was guiding this Nation through another crucial period. Then as now many voices clamored for a fixed policy and a rigid program; and James Russell Lowell wrote a few sentences which we might wisely apply to the conditions of today. He wrote:

"Mr. Lincoln's policy was a tentative one and rightly so. He laid down no program which must compel him to be inconsistent or unwise, no cast-iron theorem to which circumstances must be fitted as they rose, or else be useless to his ends. Mr. Lincoln, as it seems to us in reviewing his career, though we have sometimes in our impatience thought otherwise, has always waited, as a wise man should, till the right moment brought up all his reserves. One would be apt to think, from some of the criticisms made on Mr. Lincoln's course * * * that the chief object of a statesman should be rather to proclaim his adhesion to certain doctrines than to achieve their triumph by quietly accomplishing his ends. In our opinion, there is no more unsafe politician than a conscientiously rigid doctrinaire, nothing more sure to end in disaster than a theoretic scheme of policy that admits of no pliability for contingencies.

"Mr. Lincoln's perilous task has been to carry a rather shaky raft through the rapids, making fast the unrulier logs as he could snatch opportunity, and the country is to be congratulated that he did not think it his duty to run straight at all hazards, but cautiously to assure himself with his setting-pole where the main current was, and to keep steadily to that. * * * Whatever were his wishes, it was no less duty than policy to mark out for himself a line of action that would not further distract the country, by raising before their time questions which plainly would soon enough compel attention and for which every day was making the answer more easy * * *. While every day was bringing the people nearer to the conclusion which all thinking men saw to be inevitable from the beginning, it was wise in Mr. Lincoln to leave the shaping of his policy to events. In this country, where the rough and ready understanding of the people is sure at last to be the controlling power, a profound common-sense is the best genius for statesmanship. Hitherto the wisdom of the President's measures has been justified by the fact that they have always resulted in more firmly uniting public opinion. One of the things particularly admirable in the public utterances of President Lincoln is a certain tone of familiar dignity, which, while it is perhaps the most difficult attainment of mere style, is also no doubtful indication of personal character. There must be something essentially noble in an elective ruler who can descend to the level of confidential ease without forfeiting respect, something very manly in one who can break through the etiquette of his conventional rank and trust himself to the reason and intelligence of those who have elected him. No higher compliment was ever paid to a nation than the simple confidence, the fireside plainness, with which Mr. Lincoln always addresses himself to the reason of the people."

It has been my purpose thus far to indicate that the test of the recovery program of the administration must be found in the effects of that program as a whole rather than in a meticulous analysis of the theoretical objectives and apparent results of each item in that program. I know of nothing more ludicrous than the efforts of those who, having criticized practically every measure and its administration, then find themselves faced with the unhappy choice of either denying the obvious fact of a vast improvement in the condition of the country—or trying to demonstrate that all good results have come in spite of unsound political policies and that we would be much better off if none of the new-deal measures had been tried.

The actual and definite effect of some of these supposedly retarding measures can be summed up rapidly.

A banking system which was in a state of collapse has been restored to health and public confidence. Over 50,000,000 bank accounts are now insured.

An agricultural population which was mostly bankrupt, generally despairing, and in certain areas on the verge of forcible resistance to tax collections and foreclosures, has been rehabilitated to a remarkable degree. Prices of basic commodities previously declining below cost of production have been raised to about the desirable level of pre-war parity.

In the fields of industry, starvation wages, excessive hours of work, child-labor, and cut-throat practices have been largely eliminated in businesses employing millions of wage earnings and investments of billions of dollars. Between four and five million workers have been reemployed in either part-time or full-time jobs. Additional and improved employment has relieved the distress of other millions who were previously employed on part-time work at utterly inadequate wages.

Through Federal relief of financial pressures, over 1,500,000 homes in cities and in rural areas have been saved from foreclosure. More than $5,000,000,000 have been disbursed in loans and other advances by the R. F. C. that have saved thousands of corporate institutions and protected the investments and savings of uncounted millions of our people.

In the relief of destitution, between 3,000,000 and 6,000,000 families have been maintained through Federal aid, which has furnished the means of subsistence continually for between 12,000,000 and 20,000,000 men, women, and children. Through public works and the Civilian Conservation Corps, over a million men have been directly given useful, self-respecting employment.

In this summary report of benefits conferred by some of the major Federal activities in relief, recovery, and reconstruction, there is no mention made of scores of other contributions to the advancement of the general welfare, no mention of extensive planning and research and administrative betterments of public services which are producing permanent economic and social gains.

Nor will I ask to evaluate the benefits conferred generally on 125,000,000 people who have been released from living in the nightmare of increasing unemployment, profitless labor, and spreading destitution all around them, and whose economic security has been restored and strengthened by new and powerful safeguards.

It has been my purpose only to sum up the obvious and undeniable benefits conferred directly upon millions of farmers, millions of wage earners, millions of property owners, and millions of the unemployed, easing their crushing burdens, relieving their intolerable distress, and replacing their desperate fears with hope and confidence.

Over at the Job Foundation for Economic Research, worthy scholars who have been studying statistics, charts, and diagrams, and analyzing, under microscopes, the detailed workings, the methods and objectives of every part of the recovery program may shake their puzzled heads in a mournful unison of disapproval. They have been rereading Adam Smith and Ricardo and perhaps a revised edition of Malthus, and the earlier, but not the later writings of John Stuart Mill. They have again dusted off the iron law of wages and patched up the ill-balanced scales of supply and demand.

Somehow the logic of events is running contra to the logic of their theories. Physical scientists will agree that people cannot lift themselves by their boot straps. But by human cooperation in production, and exchange, and finance, such miracles are commonplace. Theoretically, if you devaluate the dollar, prices should rise; but they don't rise. Theoretically, if you increase wages, prices should rise; but they don't rise. When Jones lends Smith $10, no more buying power or wealth has been created; but in practical effect a purchasing power of about $20 may have been made out of $10.

Theoretically, the political economy of a nation should be determined by the predictable operation of so-called "economic" laws, but it is, in fact, determined by the unpredictable currents of the emotions, as well as the physical needs, of masses of human beings. These emotions proceed from a constant conflict between fleshly appetites and spiritual strivings; and under their stimulus men fight and prey upon each other, work together and help each other, build churches in the midst of slums, hospitals in the breeding grounds of pestilence, and temples of peace on the edge of every battlefield.

It is a part of the wisdom of a leader of democracy to yield and to appeal to logic and illogic, to reason and emotion as necessity demands. He may not presume to know just what the people ought to do, but he makes it his business to know just what the people want to do. And in the long run he will find that, in helping people to do what they want to do, he is, like Job, fulfilling the purposes of divine Providence.

We are making steady progress toward economic recovery in this country today because the Government of the United States is trying to aid the masses of the people to do what they want to do. In the cities they don't want to starve; they don't want charity; they do want to earn a living by useful work. On the farms they don't want to work for nothing; they don't want to work only for the tax collector and the mortgage holder and the commission merchant. They want to work for themselves and to get a fair price for their products.

So the Government has undertaken in a simple, straightforward way to help the farmer get a fair price and to help the city worker get a fair wage; and to help all able-bodied idle workers get employment. The Government is trying to do this job in a way not only conforming to its legal powers but also conforming to the traditions of American life and the desire of the American people to preserve individual liberty and democratic institutions of self-government.

Accordingly the Government must place its main reliance upon bringing about a better cooperation in the conduct of private enterprises—within each enterprise, within each trade or industry and between trades and industries. To just the extent, however, that such cooperation cannot be voluntarily obtained, or if obtained, proves ineffective to meet existing needs, there is imposed a greater burden and responsibility of planning, direction and control of production and exchange by the Government.

The simple fact—unqualified by political or economic theory—is that work must be provided for the working population of a nation. An equally simple fact is that there must be a continuing exchange of work products, which calls for the continuing intelligent adjustment of production and consumption.

When it was apparent that private initiative had failed to develop the cooperative power to meet these needs—so that private property under private direction would provide a reasonable continuity of employment for all those who must work in order that they might live—then it became necessary for the Government to undertake temporarily to provide relief or work for the idle while attempting to bring about the necessary reorganization and coordination of private enterprises to meet fully their responsibilities in the competitive capitalistic economy which most of the American people desire to preserve.

Now, if we are to give a fair trial to our effort to develop successfully, and to avoid a radical change of, our economic system, we need to concentrate our attention on a few fundamental difficulties in the way of eliminating the worst evils and retaining the chief advantages of competitive private industry, by cooperative processes.

In all the welter of doubting and debate over political and economic theories and programs, only a fanatic would attempt to define one problem whose solution is most essential to economic recovery.

Weighty issues of fiscal and monetary policy must be settled. Problems of agricultural adjustment and of industrial reemployment must be solved; and every problem presented to the N. R. A. or the A. A. A. carries with it a score or more of related problems of vital significance.

Despite these difficulties, I should like to point out, in the maze of debatable issues, one problem which everyone will agree is at least of critical importance and in regard to which there is perhaps more talk and less constructive action than any other.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has frequently emphasized the fact that agricultural recovery depends upon a substantial increase of industrial production and the reemployment of several million workers in trade and industry. It needs no elaborate statistics to demonstrate that the burdens of relief from destitution and relief from financial pressures would be largely lifted by an expanding industrial production, particularly in the heavy industries. This does not mean that slums would disappear, that top-heavy railroad financial structures would be made secure, that inflated real-estate values would be reestablished, that farm and city mortgage payments could be easily met, or that all the pressing questions of social and economic security would be answered, merely by the reemployment of idle workers in the production of durable goods.

If we had a vast expansion in this industrial field, there would still remain the fundamental need of maintaining a balance between agricultural and industrial activity, a balance between production and consumption, a balance between exports and imports, a balance between credit extensions and ability to pay. In a word, a general business revival will not mean a lasting recovery unless with our reviving energies and financial powers we go to work to reconstruct our economic system, so that it will be self-improving instead of self-destructive.

The rehabilitation of our deteriorated industrial plants and transportation systems and the construction of better housing for several million families would provide work directly and indirectly for all our able-bodied unemployed. During their employment the service trades and consumption goods industries would prosper. Farmers would make more money. Investments in private corporations, in mortgages, in municipal bonds, would become more valuable; land values and rents would rise.

But—with the experience of other booms behind us—let us look ahead and ask how the vast debts created in any new period of credit expansion would be paid? In the boom period of 1921 to 1929 we spent seven billions improving the railroads, and other billions in building concrete highways and motor vehicles and all the accessories of motor transportation which would take traffic from the railroads. We had to stop building finally because we could not use all the facilities we had built.

In this same period we built office buildings, apartments, and hotels utterly beyond our existing ability to use them. We expanded industrial plants in the same reckless way, until we had provided the means of producing more than we could then absorb. This expanding process also reduced the number of workers necessary to operate our industrial machine, so that when we stopped employing men to build additions to our industrial plant we had an unemployment problem of millions of dislocated workers on our hands and a financial problem of billions of dollars invested in properties that could not possibly earn a return.

Thus all thoughtful men realize that in the end the continuity and steady advance of prosperity depends very largely upon maintaining a balance between production and consumption which depends considerably upon the equitable distribution of the rewards of huge cooperative enterprises. Where there is a balance of power between economic interests and where fair competition is maintained, we may have a continuing adjustment of prices or wages to approximate economic justice. I am willing to pay tribute to the economic theory that only through fair competition in a free market can we determine what is a fair price. It is one of my principal objections to State socialism that it can provide no safe measure of a fair price and a fair wage.

But if we are to obtain a balanced competitive economy it seems to be inescapable logic that a continuing balance of the economic powers of competing interests must be developed and maintained. If control through an overwhelming economic or political power is vested in any one economic interest, we have the evils and tyrannies inherent in fascism, communism, or any form of State socialism. But at the same time, through preserving the irresponsibility of a competitive system, we have not gained the responsibility which under State socialism would be imposed upon the Government.

The primary control of trade and industry, under our present economic system, goes automatically to those who use money and property for the establishment of a private business designed to produce profits, out of which compensation will be obtained for the use of property and the services of management. The entire responsibility for the preservation and use of property, and for the meeting of pay-roll obligations to labor, rests upon management. Those who accept this responsibility must be allowed the power to fulfill their obligations. Of course, a different situation would be presented if a group of workers were engaging in a cooperative enterprise, accepting the risks of loss and inability to pay wages. In that case the sharing of control would conform to the principle that only those who accept the responsibilities of management should exercise the powers of management.

If, however, the workers in an enterprise have no voice in the determination of terms and conditions of employment, there will exist a lack of economic balance, which will continually menace the stability of the economic system. Such a condition results not only in a lack of balance between the conflicting interests of employer and employee, but also a lack of balance between producing and purchasing power; because the worker's ability to influence his wage gives him also some control over his purchasing power. It is inevitable in a competitive system that each producer will seek to reduce his labor costs and to increase the profits of ownership and management. Thereby producers in the aggregate reduce mass purchasing power and increase capital investments, while at the same time they diminish the possibility of the profitable use of capital and gradually prepare the way for a breakdown in production and exchange, a depression of business, and the necessary wiping out of capital values, which have been unduly inflated by this process.

Therefore, it was recognized as one of the most important requirements of the National Industrial Recovery Act, to provide for strengthening the collective power of the wage earners by protecting the freedom of their association for mutual aid and for the creation of an adequate power of collective bargaining.

It is my earnest conviction that there is nothing more necessary to the improvement of our industrial system and the maintenance of a balanced economy than the adequate organization of labor, free from any control by representatives of the competing economic interest of ownership and management.

There are many difficulties in the way of realizing the objectives of section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, but chief among these are, first, the unwillingness of many employers of labor to give up an existing advantage in power to protect and to promote self-interest, and, second, the traditional suspicion and hostility of labor organizations to accepting the obligations and fulfilling the responsibilities that must go with the power to determine the success or failure of private enterprise.

In my opinion, the solution of these difficulties and the establishment of a sound policy of labor relations, which will be acceptable alike to progressive-minded employers and labor organizations, are absolutely vital to a real and lasting industrial recovery.

There are many employers today who are thoroughly reconciled to collective bargaining, who are entirely willing to maintain cooperative relations with independent labor organizations, if they could be assured that, having relinquished a measure of control over their enterprises, they could rely upon a full acceptance of their responsibilities by the labor organizations with which they made agreements.

The acceptance of such responsibilities by labor organizations would necessarily include these understandings: First, when satisfactory relations had been established by contract they would not be destroyed, either because of differences between their members and other employers, or because of internal dissensions among the employees themselves, or because of a temporary inability to agree upon the extension or interpretation of an existing contract. These assurances would not mean giving up the fundamental right to strike against a particular employer because of differences with that employer which could not be adjusted. They would involve the making of every reasonable effort to arrive at an agreement and the willingness ordinarily to submit unsettled controversies to at least a temporary determination through some impartial agency.

There is no question that many existing labor organizations would guarantee the continuity of peaceful labor relations if they could receive corresponding assurances from employers, such as: First, that no effort would be made by an employer or his agents to interfere with their freedom of association, selection of their representatives, and unembarrassed advocacy of their interests. Second, that free access would be given to all the pertinent facts regarding the conduct and profitableness of the enterprise in which the employees are engaged. Third, that the employer would not seek to modify his contractual relations under pressures from other employers; and that he also would use every reasonable effort to arrive at agreements or submit unsettled issues to an impartial adjudication.

There are today some groups of employers and some labor organizations that have no faith in, and are unwilling to enter into, genuine cooperative labor relationships. There are employers whose self-willed determination to rule or ruin their own affairs, regardless of the general welfare, is a serious obstacle to any lasting improvement of our economic system. There are labor organizations so imbued with theories of class interest, so unwilling to accept responsibilities to the general welfare, that they cannot be expected to join in good faith in a cooperative program. But I venture to believe that the vast majority of employers and employees are sick and tired of industrial warfare; that they are genuinely willing to share the responsibilities of cooperation in the peaceful adjustment of all the conflicting interests of management and labor.

It seems to me that public opinion might easily be mobilized in support of a labor policy, under which the use of economic or physical coercion would be outlawed in the relations of employers and employees.

The Federal Government and the States have provided means for the extension of governmental aid to those who desire to maintain the continuity of employment and to provide for the peaceful adjustment of all conflicts of interest. Only the arbitrary refusal of one party to use these opportunities should justify coercive efforts by the other. If we are not able to move definitely, as a matter of public policy, in this direction, we face the strong probability of a greater intensity in industrial conflicts, more bitter uses of violence and coercion on both sides, and increased demands for the exercise of governmental power to compel an end of industrial warfare. We also face the grave difficulty of bringing about any lasting industrial recovery so long as this vital measure of cooperation cannot be achieved.

The forceful organization of labor, the herding of unwilling men either into company unions by employer coercion, or into independent unions by intimidation cannot establish those free and voluntary associations necessary for cooperative action to protect the worker-consumer interests.

The employer who seeks to control the organization of workers by fraud or coercion is, whether he knows it or not, working toward a Fascist economy—a political control of industry in behalf of property interests. The labor organization that attempts by force and violence to compel workers to accept the discipline of an organization to which they do not wish to belong, is, whether it knows it or not, working toward a Communist economy—a political control of industry by labor interests.

The sequence of events should be obvious—the compulsions of force can never be exerted under any government without in some way receiving the sanction of the government. Our constitutional guaranties of liberty are not being maintained when one economic interest is permited to exploit another by coercive means. So that the struggle for coercive power must be in the end a struggle to control the government.

Time and your patience will not permit me to elaborate this theme. What I have said, however, will permit me to state one far-flung conclusion without reviewing all the premises: We are engaged in a political struggle as fundamentally important as the revolutionary movements of 150 years ago that swept away autocracies and laid the foundations of the democratic governments of the nineteenth century. There is a great emotional current moving in the direction of a new resort to the forceful organization of masses of people under the control of militant, ruthless minorities—political and economic dictatorships that openly deride the idealism of liberty and individual advancement—and that set the standard of social progress through a disciplined service to the State—which means in fact service to the programs of a professional ruling class.

Here in the United States we are engaged in one of the major conflicts between the opposing theories of individual liberty and social discipline. If we are to uphold the traditional idealism of our Republic, we must qualify our competitive freedom by the restraints inherent in any cooperative enterprise. Otherwise the increasing intensity of ruthless competition will be very easily and rapidly transformed into actual warfare—such as we have seen develop all too often out of industrial struggles. And out of warfare will come as always the triumph of organized force and the enthronement of a power intolerant of the freedom of democratic institutions.

No groups will play a greater part in determining the destiny of America than the organizations of employers and employees, who may either draw us all closer together in their desire and ability to cooperate for the common good or may drive us all apart in making war upon each other for the advancement of their immediate special interests. Having questioned the wisdom of some economists, let me pay tribute to the ultimate wisdom of one by ending with a quotation from John Stuart Mill, who wrote, regarding employers and employees, this suggestion:

"Both these classes must learn by practice to labor and combine for generous or at all events for public and social purposes, and not, as hitherto, solely for narrowly interested ones."

In that education lies our greatest hope of achieving economic security and freedom.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CLARK proceeded to address the Senate on the subject of the Munitions Industry. After having spoken about 5 minutes—

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. McNARY. It was my understanding that we had just reached the order of the calendar, and that it is only by unanimous consent that the calendar can be displaced at this time. If I am correct, may I not ask the Senator from Missouri to let us finish the morning hour and make his remarks at its conclusion?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that I had given notice of an intention to speak today, and the morning business seemed to have been concluded.

Mr. McNARY. Oh, no; I think the Senator is wholly wrong. The Senator, having given his notice, should have made his remarks at the conclusion of the morning hour; but we have not disposed of the morning hour or of the calendar.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator desires to make a point of order, of course, it will be well taken.

Mr. McNARY. I do not intend to do it. I do not want to do it. I suggest that the Senator voluntarily surrender the floor, and at the conclusion of the morning business he can go ahead and finish his remarks.

Mr. CLARK. If there is any pending business before the Senate, I have no disposition to interfere with it.

Mr. McNARY. I do not know. I am told that there are some bills on the calendar which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desired to bring up. Personally, I shall not make the objection; but the objection could be made.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Prior to the time when its present occupant took the chair, the Vice President stated that the calendar was in order under rule VIII. That had just come before us when the present occupant of the chair recognized the Senator from Missouri. I think we ought to proceed to consider the calendar, under rule VIII, which was asked for particularly by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. CLARK. Of course, if the Senator from Michigan desires to make the point of order, it will be well taken.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I may add that the Senator from Utah had some special bills touching the District of Columbia which he desired to have considered. He has left his seat temporarily, assuming that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] would occupy the floor for some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar will be called.

(Mr. CLARK's speech entire appears at the conclusion of the consideration of bills on the calendar, p. 271.)

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 364) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not at all conversant with the bill; but I certainly cannot permit it to be passed by unanimous consent unless we have some description of its purposes. In the absence of the chairman of the committee I certainly shall have to object, unless some Senator can explain the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the report of the committee on the bill is before the Senate at this time. The bill is similar to other measures which have been passed at previous sessions, and which then had the favorable report of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. The bill came before the Senate too late for action at the last session. I am sure there is no reason why it should not have the approval of the Congress at this time, in view of the fact that other patriotic societies have had similar legislation in their favor.

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee report the bill unanimously?

Mr. CAPPER. The report of the committee was unanimous, both at the last session and at this session.

Mr. McNARY. Was the bill passed by the Senate at the last session?

Mr. CAPPER. It was reported too late for action at the last session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property situated in square numbered 137 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, described as lot 35, occupied and used by the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War, is hereby exempt from all taxation so long as the same is so occupied and used, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the Act of March 3, 1877, as amended and supplemented (D. C. Code, title 20, sec. 712), providing for exemptions of church and school property.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 396) to amend section 1180 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia with respect to usury was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RECORDING OF DEEDS OF TRUST AND MORTGAGES IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 397) to provide for recording of deeds of trust and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia, and for the releasing thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was to occupy the floor, and I was called out to attend a committee meeting. I wanted to have considered the District bills which are now upon the calendar. Have any of them been passed over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bills 396 and 397 were passed over.

Mr. KING. Senate bill 396 may be passed over temporarily; but I ask that the Senate recur to Senate bill 397.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this measure appears rather formidable, but as a matter of fact it is not so formidable as it seems to be. It was disclosed quite recently, in some investigations conducted, and in certain cases which were passed upon by the courts, that trust deeds which had been executed to secure large issues of bonds had been released before payment had been made. As I understand, the recorder was imposed upon and given to understand that the obligations which the trust deed had been given to secure had been discharged. There seem to have been no adequate provisions of law or regulations by the recorder's office for the protection of bondholders against entry upon the record of a release of trust deeds prior to the payment of the obligations for which the trust deeds were given as evidence of security. In other words, trust deeds were released upon the records, though the bonds were not paid. Senator Blaine, when in the Senate, and members of the committee carefully considered the questions outlined and reported favorably a bill, of which the pending measure contains substantially the same provisions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. When used in this act the following terms shall, unless the text otherwise indicates, have the following respective meanings:

"Recorder" shall mean the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia or anyone authorized by law to act for him.

"Court" shall mean the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or one of the justices thereof.

"Deed of trust" means a deed of trust, a mortgage, or any other instrument conveying or pledging real estate in the District of Columbia as security for a debt.

"Note" shall include any note or notes, bond or bonds, or other evidence or evidences of debt secured by a deed of trust.

"Release" shall mean a deed of release or other instrument which releases real estate from the effects of a deed of trust.

"Trustee" shall include trustees under a deed of trust, a mortgagee or mortgagees, or anyone having power of sale under a mortgage pledging or conveying real estate in the District of Columbia as security for a debt.

ADDITIONAL DUTIES OF RECORDER

SEC. 2. That the recorder, except upon order of the court, shall not accept for record nor record any deed of trust nor any release thereof except in accordance with the provisions of this act.

IDENTIFYING NOTES

SEC. 3. (a) No deed of trust, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be accepted for record or recorded by the recorder unless the note secured thereby shall have been identified by him by stamping or imprinting thereon over his signature the words:

"This is (one of) the promissory note(s) described in a deed of trust to the trustee(s) named hereon, said deed of trust being recorded ———— as instrument no. ——.

"Recorder of Deeds,
"District of Columbia."

(b) All notes presented to the recorder for identification as provided herein shall be identified by him in the manner prescribed in this section, and said notes shall be identified and available for return on the same day they are presented.

(c) The fee to be charged for said identification shall be $1 for the first note secured under any one instrument with an additional charge of 10 cents for each additional note secured thereunder: Provided, however, That the fee herein provided for shall be in addition to the established fee now charged for recording deeds of trust.

PRESENTATION OF CANCELED NOTES

SEC. 4. (a) No release, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be accepted for record or recorded by the recorder unless the note secured by the instrument being released shall be presented to the recorder marked "Paid" and duly canceled: Provided, however, That where any note is lost, destroyed, or otherwise unavailable for presentation to the recorder upon affidavit as to the facts in reference thereto filed with the recorder and the posting with said recorder of a bond, approved by the court, assuring the payment of such note in full, or upon evidence that a sufficient amount of money to assure the payment of such note in full has been deposited in the registry of the court as hereinafter provided, the recorder shall accept for record and record said release.

(b) Partial releases may be accepted for record and recorded by the recorder upon presentation to him of evidence satisfactory to him that the amount required by the terms of the deed of trust authorizing such release in part has been paid and that such payment has been endorsed upon the note secured by said deed of trust: Provided, however, That if the recorder shall refuse to record any such release, such refusal shall be subject to review by the court by bill in equity: And provided further, That where any note is lost, destroyed, or otherwise unavailable for the endorsement of said payment thereon, upon affidavit as to the facts in reference thereto filed with the recorder and the posting with said recorder of a bond, approved by the court, assuring the payment of the amount required by the terms of the deed of trust authorizing such release in part, or upon evidence that a sufficient amount of money to assure the payment of the amount required by the terms of the deed of trust authorizing such release in part has been deposited in the registry of the court as hereinafter provided, the recorder shall accept for record and record said partial release.

(c) In accordance with the provisions of this section the clerk of the court shall accept and deposit in the registry of the court any moneys presented to him for such deposit to assure the payment of any note unavailable for presentation to the recorder as provided for in this section; and upon request said clerk of the court shall certify to the recorder the fact that such moneys have been so deposited for said note.

(d) Upon petition to the court by any party or parties claiming any money deposited in the registry of the court as provided for in this section, the court upon satisfactory proof shall order the payment of said funds so deposited to the party or parties entitled thereto, without poundage or commission.

(e) The fee to be charged for examining any paid and canceled note or notes or evidence of payment presented in connection with recording any release as herein provided, shall be 50 cents for the first note or evidence of payment examined in connection with any release, with an additional fee of 5 cents for each additional note or evidence of payment examined in connection with such release: Provided, however, That the fee herein provided for shall be in addition to the established fee now charged for recording any release.

(f) In any case where the owner and holder of a note shall consent to the release, in whole or in part, of real estate from the effect of a deed of trust, under conditions not provided by the terms of said deed of trust, the owner of said real estate may file a bill in equity in the court setting forth such facts, and if said court finds that the owner and holder of said note did so consent to the recording of said release, said court shall enter an order directing said recorder to accept and record said release.

(g) In any case where the owner of real estate is entitled to have the same released, in whole or in part, from the effect of a deed of trust, in accordance with the terms thereof, which said terms involve the doing of any act or thing or the performance of any condition other than the payment of money, said owner may file a bill in equity in said court setting forth that he has complied with the terms of said deed of trust, and if said court finds that said owner has so complied, said court shall enter an order directing said recorder to accept and record said release.

PUBLIC UTILITIES EXEMPT

SEC. 5. Deeds of trust executed by any corporation operating under the supervision, control, or regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission or any public utilities commission or like body of any State or possession of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any release thereof, shall be exempt from the provisions of this act.

CORPORATE TRUSTEES EXEMPT

SEC. 6. (a) The provisions of this act, except as to section 7 hereof, shall not apply to any deed of trust or release in which the trustee, or one of the trustees, named is a banking institution authorized by its charter or by law to act as trustee and doing business under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That said banking institution has signified its willingness to act as such trustee by its signature and seal to the deed of trust before the same is recorded.

(b) If an individual shall be named as cotrustee with such banking institution and the individual trustee shall die before all the terms and provisions of the deed of trust have been executed, all the powers, estate, and duties conferred and granted by the deed of trust shall, upon the death of said individual trustee, vest in such banking institution with like force and effect as if such institution had been originally named as sole trustee.

(c) In the event such banking institution is named in a deed of trust as sole trustee or as cotrustee with an individual trustee, the recorder, upon request, shall identify the note secured by said deed of trust in the manner provided and for the fees prescribed in section 3 of this act.

BANKING DEPOSITORY

SEC. 7. No clause or provision contained in any deed of trust hereafter executed providing for the payment or redemption in part or in whole of the indebtedness secured thereby by deposit of funds for that purpose shall be valid unless the depository so named shall be a banking institution doing business under supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency and the banking institution so named shall have signified its willingness to act as such depository by its signature and seal to the deed of trust before same is recorded, and if such payment or redemption by deposit shall be made pursuant to a privilege of anticipation reserved in the deed of trust, 30 days' previous notice of the time of such payment or redemption shall be given, which notice shall be published twice a week in a newspaper having general circulation in the District of Columbia for three successive weeks during said 30-day period, and such notice shall specify the serial number or numbers of the note or notes to be redeemed or paid and the date at which it is intended to redeem or pay the same. When such banking institution shall certify to the recorder that it holds on deposit the sum required by the deed of trust to be paid for the release in whole or in part of said deed of trust, the recorder shall accept for record and record such release.

SEC. 8. The duties of the recorder as now defined by law are hereby enlarged to embrace and include all the duties imposed by this act. The recorder is authorized to employ such additional personnel as may be necessary to carry out the duties imposed upon him by this act within appropriations authorized for his office, the salaries of such personnel to be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 9. The provisions of this act shall become effective 90 days after its passage: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply either to deeds of trust recorded prior to the date this act shall become effective or to any subsequent release thereof.

SAVING CLAUSE

SEC. 10. If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, or requirement of this act be for any reason held to be unconstitutional or invalid, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions thereof. The Congress of the United States hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, and requirement thereof, irrespective of the fact that any one or more of the sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements thereof may hereafter be declared unconstitutional or invalid.

THE "NUMBERS" RACKET

The bill (S. 398) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the chairman of the committee should make a brief explanation of this bill.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to do so. The measure is one of considerable importance. It passed the Senate at the last session without objection. It then had the unanimous approval of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill was recommended by Mr. Garnett, the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia; by Mr. Prettyman, the corporation counsel; and by Mr. Bride, the latter being the predecessor of Mr. Prettyman as corporation counsel. It was recommended likewise by the District Commissioners.

In brief, this is the purpose of the bill: It has become a racket here to sell "numbers", and little school children and people of limited means are induced to buy these "numbers." It is a gambling lottery most invidious and very injurious. The existing law makes no provision for dealing with the sale of "numbers", and the pending measure merely writes the word "numbers" into the statute, so as to enable the authorities to deal with the sale of "numbers", as well as with the existing forms of lottery and gambling. There are a few other provisions, but of minor importance.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the bill deal only with gambling?

Mr. KING. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting a code of law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same hereby are, amended as follows:

Section 863 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 863. If any person shall within the District keep, set up, or promote, or be concerned as owner, agent, or clerk, or in any other manner, in managing any policy lottery or policy shop, or the game or device known as the 'game of numbers', or shall sell or transfer any ticket, certificate, bill, token, or other device purporting or intended to guarantee or assure to any person or entitle him to a chance of drawing or obtaining a prize, to be drawn in any lottery, or in the game or device commonly known as 'policy lottery' or 'policy' or 'numbers', or shall, for himself or another person, sell or transfer, or have in his possession for the purpose of sale or transfer, or shall aid in selling, exchanging, negotiating, or transferring a chance or ticket in or share of a ticket in any policy lottery or game of numbers, or any such bill, certificate, token, or other device, he shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both. The possession of any such tickets, certificates, bills, slips, tokens, or other device shall be prima facie evidence of purpose or intent of selling, transferring, exchanging, or negotiating the same."

SEC. 2. Section 865 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 865. Whoever shall in the District set up or keep any gaming table, or any house or part thereof, vessel, or place, on land or water, for the purpose of gaming, or for the purpose of buying, selling, or dealing in numbers, or any slips, tokens, certificates, or devices in connection therewith, or gambling device commonly called 'A B C', 'faro bank', 'E O', 'roulette', 'equality', 'keno', 'thimbles', or 'little joker', 'numbers', or any kind of gaming table or gambling device adapted, devised, and designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property, or shall induce, entice, and permit any person to bet or play at or upon any such gaming table or gambling device, or suffer a game to be played by which money or any article or thing is lost or won, shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than 5 years. The possession of any such gaming table or any other gambling device, or numbers slips, certificates, tickets, or tokens, shall be prima facie evidence of the unlawful use thereof and of the purpose of gaming or gambling or of inducing or permitting betting or playing, on the part of the lessee, occupant, or owner of such house, vessel, or place where such gaming table or other gambling device, or numbers slips, certificates, tickets, or tokens may be found."

SEC. 3. Section 866 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 866. Whoever in the District knowingly permits any gaming table, bank, or device to be set up or used for the purpose of gaming in any house, building, vessel, shed, booth, shelter, lot, vehicle, or other premises or property to him belonging or by him occupied, or of which at the time he has possession or control, shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail for not more than 1 year or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both."

SEC. 4. Section 869 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 869. It shall be unlawful for any person or association of persons to bet, gamble, or make books or pools on the result of any trotting or running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election, or any contest of any kind, or game of baseball, or the game known as 'numbers', or any like game. Any person or association of persons violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 5. Section 911 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 911. Upon complaint, under oath, before the police court, or a United States commissioner, setting forth that the affiant believes and has good cause to believe that there are concealed in any house or place articles stolen, taken by robbers, embezzled, or obtained by false pretenses, forged or counterfeited coins, stamps, labels, bank bills, or other instruments, or dies, plates, stamps, or brands for making the same, books or printed papers, drawings, engravings, photographs, or pictures of an indecent or obscene character, or instruments for immoral use, or any gaming table, device, or apparatus kept for the purpose of unlawful gaming, or any lottery tickets or lottery policies, or any book, paper, memorandum, or device for or used in recording any bet or deposit of money or thing or consideration of value received for any share, ticket, certificate, writing, bill, slip, or token in any pool or lottery or as a wager on or in connection with any race, game, contest, election, or other gambling transaction or device of an unlawful nature as defined in sections 863, 864, 865, 866, 868, and 869, of the act of March 3, 1901, as amended and supplemented, particularly describing the house or place to be searched, the things to be seized, substantially alleging the offense in relation thereto and describing the person to be seized, the said court or United States commissioner may issue a warrant to the marshal or any officer of the Metropolitan Police commanding him to search such house or place for the property or other things, and, if found, to bring the same, together with the person to be seized, before the police court.

"The said warrant shall have annexed to it, or inserted therein, a copy of the affidavit upon which it is issued, and may be substantially in the form following:

"Whereas there has been filed before ——— an affidavit, of which the following is a copy (here insert). These are therefore to command you to enter (here describe the place) and there diligently search for the said articles, goods, or chattels in the said affidavit described, and that you bring the same, or any part thereof, found on said search, and also the body of ———, before the police court, to be dealt with and disposed of according to law."

SEC. 6. Section 914 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 914. If the accused be discharged, the property or other things seized shall be returned to the person in whose possession they were found. If he be convicted, the property stolen, embezzled, or obtained by false pretenses shall be returned to its owner, and the other articles before described, including vehicles used in the transportation of apparatus or other devices used in gambling of every kind and description, shall be destroyed under direction of the court."

SALE OF DERELICT PROPERTY

The bill (S. 399) to amend section 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is not an important bill. Under the law, certain property, for instance, bicycles, and other articles which may be derelicts upon the streets is taken into custody by the police department. They hold these articles for 6 months and then sell them at public auction. The limit placed upon the property which may be so disposed of is $50. The District Commissioners recommend, and the recommendation is fortified by the report of the police authorities, that the value of property which may be so sequestered and sold be raised from $50 to $100.

There is a unanimous report by the Committee on the District of Columbia itself and the bill is recommended by the District Commissioners.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 416 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended by striking out the word "fifty" where it occurs in said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

SEC. 2. That section 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 417. All property, except perishable property and animals, that shall remain in the custody of the property clerk for the period of 6 months, with the exception of motor vehicles which shall be held for a period of 3 months, without any lawful claimant thereto after having been three times advertised in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia, shall be sold at public auction, and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the policemen's fund; and all money that shall remain in his hands for said period of 6 months shall be so advertised, and if no lawful claimant appear shall be likewise paid into the policemen's fund."

ADMISSION OF STEPCHILDREN TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The bill (S. 400) to permit the stepchildren of certain officers and employees of the United States to be admitted to the public schools of the District of Columbia without payment of tuition was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the present law children of officers and certain other employees of the Government who are residing in Washington are permitted to enter the public schools without making payment of tuition. It has been disclosed that there are stepchildren in this world, and some of the officers and other persons who come within the category of the bill have stepchildren. This measure merely extends the privilege enjoyed by children to stepchildren.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ninth paragraph following the heading "furniture" under the caption "public schools" in section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes", approved February 25, 1929, is amended to read as follows:

"The children and stepchildren of officers and men of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and children and stepchildren of other employees of the United States stationed outside the District of Columbia shall be admitted to the public schools without payment of tuition."

PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART

The bill (S. 401) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", approved February 27, 1929, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let that bill go over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator will not object when he understands the purpose of the bill.

The only change made in the existing law by this measure is in the substitution of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia as one of the board in place of the United States district attorney. The district attorney, Mr. Garnett, feels that his duties are such that he should not be called upon to pass upon such questions, which are purely local in their character, which are brought before the board. He contends that the corporation counsel should be a member of the board. The Commissioners share this view, and the District Committee takes the same view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4 and 46 of the act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia, approved February 27, 1929, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. There is hereby created a commission on licensure to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia, consisting of the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the United States Commissioner of Education, the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, the superintendent of public schools of the District of Columbia, and the health officer of the District of Columbia, each ex officio. The commission shall elect a president and a vice president. The health officer shall be the secretary and treasurer of the commission. The commission shall make and from time to time may alter such rules as it deems necessary for the conduct of its business, and for the execution and enforcement of the provisions of this act. It shall adopt a common seal, and from time to time alter the same as to it seems proper. The courts shall take judicial notice of such seal.

"SEC. 46. It shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and of the major and superintendent of police of said District to enforce the provisions of this act. Criminal prosecution, except for perjury, and proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of licenses or registration and toward the issue of injunctions, under the provisions of this act, shall be conducted by the corporation counsel for the District of Columbia."

UNLAWFUL ENTRY ON PRIVATE PROPERTY

The bill (S. 402) to amend section 824 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have an anomalous provision in the present law. Prosecutions may be initiated against individuals who enter occupied buildings unlawfully and unlawfully retain possession, but there is no provision for dealing with persons who enter buildings which are unoccupied. So that if a man has 2 houses, 1 occupied and 1 unoccupied, he may initiate criminal proceedings against the trespasser who enters the occupied premises; but criminal proceedings may not be instituted against individuals who trespass upon his unoccupied property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 824 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 824. Unlawful entry on private property: Any person who, without lawful authority, shall enter, or attempt to enter, a private dwelling against the will of the lawful occupant thereof, or being therein, without lawful authority to remain therein, shall refuse to quit the same on the demand of the lawful occupant thereof; or any person who, without lawful authority, shall enter, or attempt to enter, an unoccupied private dwelling against the will or consent of the lawful owner thereof, or his duly authorized agent, or being therein, without lawful authority to remain therein, shall refuse to quit the same on the demand of the lawful owner thereof or his duly authorized agent, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50 or imprisonment in the jail for not more than 6 months, or both, in the discretion of the court."

ACQUISITION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 404) to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it has been disclosed in condemnation proceedings that frequently when substantially all of the property has been taken for a public use a small segment remains and that it possesses but little value. Recently, I am advised, in condemnation proceedings by the District the larger part of a lot containing a house was taken, leaving a very small area which has but little, if any, value to the owner.

This measure merely provides that in such condemnation proceedings the Government may enlarge, so to speak, if it desires, the privilege or the right to take property and include the entire tract. It is a measure which has been recommended by the Commissioners and has received a great deal of study at the hands of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote the orderly and proper development of the seat of government of the United States, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or agencies of the United States authorized by law to acquire real estate, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to acquire, in the public interest, by gift, dedication, exchange, purchase, or condemnation, fee simple title to land, or rights in or on land or easements or restrictions therein, within said District, for public uses, works, and improvements authorized by Congress, in excess of that actually needed for and essential to the usefulness of such public uses, works, and improvements, in order to preserve the view, appearance, light, and air and to enhance the usefulness of such public works and improvements, to prevent the use of private property adjacent to such public works and improvements in such a manner as to impair the public benefit derived from the construction thereof, or to prevent inequities or hardship to the owners of adjacent private property by depriving them of the beneficial use of their property.

SEC. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia or agencies of the United States authorized by law to acquire real estate are further authorized, upon completion of public improvements, to subdivide and sell at public or private sale, or exchange, any such excess land, and to carry out such purpose or purposes, to convey any lands acquired in excess of that actually needed and which is not essential to the usefulness of such public works, with such reservations concerning the future use and occupation of such real estate as may in their discretion be necessary to protect such public improvements; and any and all moneys received from any sale or transfer of land in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and where the property sold was acquired under an appropriation authorized for the use of the District of Columbia, any and all moneys received from such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That whenever the authorities of the United States or the District of Columbia having jurisdiction over such acquired land, or rights or easements, shall elect to retain any or all of the same for use of the United States or the District of Columbia, the said authorities are authorized to use said land, rights, or easements for park, playground, highway, or alley purposes, or for any other lawful purpose which the said authorities shall deem advantageous or in the public interest.

SEC. 3. That whenever land is purchased, as provided in this act, in excess of that needed in connection with a particular project or improvement, any and all appropriations available for the payment of the purchase price, costs, and expenses incident to such project or improvement are hereby authorized for use in the payment of the purchase price, costs, and expenses of any and all excess land purchased in connection with such project or improvement, as provided in this act.

SEC. 4. That whenever excess land is condemned by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in accordance with the provisions of this act, the condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of such land shall be in accordance with chapter 15, subchapter 1 of chapter 15, and/or sections 1608 to 1610, inclusive, of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia: Provided, That any and all appropriations available for the payment of awards, damages, and costs in condemnation proceedings under chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia are hereby authorized for use in the payment of awards, damages, and costs in any and all condemnation proceedings under said chapter 15 for the acquisition of excess land, as provided in this act: Provided further, That any and all appropriations available for the payment of awards, damages, and costs in condemnation proceedings under subchapter 1 of chapter 15 and/or sections 1608 to 1610, inclusive, of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia are hereby authorized for use in the payment of awards, damages, and costs in any and all condemnation proceedings under said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 and/or said sections 1608 to 1610, inclusive, for the acquisition of excess land, as provided in this act: And provided further, That in any and all cases where such excess land is condemned, no assessments for benefits shall be levied by the jury in respect to the acquisition of said excess land.

SEC. 5. That whenever excess land is condemned by agencies of the United States, other than the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as provided in this act, the condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of such land shall be in accordance with an act approved March 1, 1929, as amended, or any law or laws in effect at the time of such condemnation for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for use of the United States: Provided, That any and all appropriations available for the condemnation of land under said act approved March 1, 1929, as amended, are hereby authorized for use in the payments of awards, damages, and costs in any and all condemnation proceedings under said act, as amended, for the acquisition of excess land, as provided in this act.

SEC. 6. That the portion of the act approved February 25, 1907, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Laws for the District of Columbia", regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets'" (34 Stat. 930; ch. 1195, sec. 491g), reading: "And where part of any lot, piece, parcel, or tract of land has been dedicated for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of the street, avenue, road, or highway, the jury, in determining whether the remainder of said lot, piece, parcel, or tract is to be assessed for benefits, and the amount of benefits, if any, to be assessed thereon, shall also take into consideration the fact of such dedication and the value of the land so dedicated" is hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. With the exception of section 6, none of the provisions of this act shall be construed as repealing any provisions of existing law pertaining to the condemnation or acquisition of streets, alleys, or land, or the law or laws relating to the subdividing of lands in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. If any provision of this act is held invalid, the remainder of the act shall not be affected thereby.

SAFETY ON THE PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

The bill (S. 408) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the chairman of the committee might well define this bill and its purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] reported the bill, and I see he has risen, no doubt for the purpose of making such explanation as might be desired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this bill is in the interest of public safety on the highways and streets within the District of Columbia. It provides that anyone who while driving a vehicle on the public highways is arrested for being under the influence of liquor or narcotics shall be deprived of the right thereafter to enjoy a license to drive on the public highways unless he can make satisfactory showing, by bond or other obligation, of his ability to insure the protection of the public. That is the general gist and tenor of the bill. It is approved by the District Commissioners and by the District corporation counsel.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator whether this bill was before the Senate at the last session?

Mr. McCARRAN. It was, and it was passed by the Senate at the last session, but did not receive consideration by the House.

Mr. McNARY. Did it fail to come up in the House, or was it defeated?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not certain of the history of the bill in the House.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that it did not receive consideration on the floor of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall in no respect be considered as a repeal of any of the provisions of the Traffic Acts for the District of Columbia but shall be construed as supplemental thereto.

SEC. 2. The motor-vehicle operator's permit and all of the registration certificates of any person who shall by a final order or judgment have been convicted of or shall have forfeited any bond or collateral given for a violation of any of the following provisions of law, to wit—

Driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or narcotic drugs, as provided in section 10 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1925, as amended, and commonly known as the "Traffic Acts";

Leaving the scene of an automobile accident in which personal injury occurs without making identity known, as provided in section 10 of said Traffic Acts;

A conviction of an offense in any other State, which if committed in the District of Columbia would be a violation of any of the aforesaid provisions of the Traffic Acts of the District of Columbia; shall be suspended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their designated agent and shall remain so suspended and shall not at any time thereafter be renewed, nor shall any other motor vehicle be thereafter registered in his name until he shall give proof of his ability to respond thereafter in damages resulting from the ownership or operation of a motor vehicle and arising by reason of personal injury to or death of any one person of at least $5,000, and, subject to the aforesaid limit for each person injured or killed, of at least $10,000 for such injury to or the death of two or more persons in any one accident, and for damage to property of at least $1,000 resulting from any one accident. Such proof in said amounts shall be furnished for each motor vehicle owned or registered by such person. If any such person shall fail to furnish said proof, his operator's permit and registration certificates shall remain suspended and shall not at any time thereafter be renewed, nor shall any other motor vehicle be thereafter registered in his name until such time as said proof be given. If such person shall not be a resident of the District of Columbia the privilege of operating any motor vehicle in the District of Columbia and the privilege of operation within the District of Columbia of any motor vehicle owned by him shall be withdrawn until he shall have furnished such proof: Provided, That in case of both residents and nonresidents, however, if it shall be duly established to the satisfaction of the said Commissioners or their designated agent, and the said Commissioners or their designated agent shall so find (a) that any such person so convicted, or who shall have pled guilty or forfeited bond or collateral, was, upon the occasion of the violation upon which such conviction, plea, or forfeiture was based, a chauffeur or motor-vehicle operator, however designated, in the employ of the owner of such motor vehicle; or a member of the same family and household of the owner of such motor vehicle, and (b) that there was not, at the time of such violation, or subsequent thereto, up to the date of such finding, any motor vehicle registered in the District of Columbia in the name of such person convicted, entering a plea of guilty or forfeiting bond or collateral, as aforesaid, then in such event, if the person in whose name such motor vehicle is registered shall give proof of ability to respond in damages, in accordance with the provisions of this act (and the said Commissioners or their designated agent shall accept such proof from such person), such chauffeur or other person, as aforesaid, shall thereupon be relieved of the necessity of giving such proof in his own behalf. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court in which any such judgment or order is rendered or other action taken to forward immediately to the said Commissioners or their designated agent a certified copy or transcript thereof, which said certified copy or transcript shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.

SEC. 3. The operator's permit and all of the registration certificates of any person, in the event of his failure to satisfy every judgment arising from an accident, or accidents, happening subsequently to the effective date of this act and which shall have become final by expiration, without appeal, of the time within which appeal might have been perfected or by final affirmance on appeal, rendered against him by a court of competent jurisdiction in the District of Columbia or any State, or in a district court of the United States, for damages on account of personal injury, or damages to property in excess of $100, resulting from the ownership or operation of a motor vehicle by him, his agent, or any other person with the express or implied consent of the owner, shall be forthwith suspended by the said Commissioners or their designated agent upon receiving a certified copy of such final judgment or judgments from the court in which the same is or are rendered showing such judgment or judgments to have been still unsatisfied more than 30 days after the same became final, and shall remain so suspended and shall not be renewed, nor shall any other motor vehicle be thereafter registered in his name while any such judgment remains unstayed, unsatisfied, and subsisting, nor until every such judgment is satisfied or discharged, except by a discharge in bankruptcy, and until the said person gives proof of his ability to respond in damages, as required in section 4 of this act for future accidents. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court in which any such judgment is rendered to forward immediately upon the expiration of said 30 days to the said Commissioners or their designated agent a certified copy of such judgment or a transcript thereof. In the event the defendant is a nonresident it shall be the duty of the said Commissioners or their designated agent to transmit to the commissioner of motor vehicles (or officer in charge of the issuance of operators' permits and registration certificates) of the State of which the defendant is a resident a certified copy of the said judgment. If after such proof has been given any other such judgment shall be recovered against such person for any accident occurring before such proof was furnished, and after the effective date of this act, such permit and certificates shall again be and remain suspended while any such judgment remains unsatisfied and subsisting: Provided, however, That (1) when $5,000 has been credited upon any judgment or judgments rendered in excess of that amount for personal injury to or the death of one person as the result of any one accident; (2) when, subject to the limit of $5,000 for each person, the sum of $10,000 has been credited upon any judgments rendered in excess of that amount for personal injury to or the death of more than one person as the result of any one accident; or (3) when $1,000 has been credited upon any judgment or judgments rendered in excess of that amount for damage to property as the result of any one accident resulting from the ownership or operation of a motor vehicle by such judgment debtor, his agent, or any other person, with his express or implied consent, then and in such event such payment or payments shall be deemed a satisfaction of such judgment or judgments for the purposes of this section only: And provided further, That a judgment debtor to whom this section applies may, for the sole purpose of giving authority to the Commissioners or their designated agent to authorize the judgment debtor to operate a motor vehicle thereafter, on due notice to the judgment creditor, apply to the court in which the trial judgment was obtained for the privilege of paying such judgment in installments, and the court, in its discretion and without prejudice to any other legal remedies which the judgment creditor may have, may so order, fixing the amounts and times of payment of the installments. While the judgment debtor is not in default in payment of such installments, the Commissioners or their designated agent upon his giving proof of ability to respond in damages for future accidents, as herein provided, may, in their discretion, restore or refrain from suspending his operator's permit and registration certificate or certificates; but such permit and certificate or certificates shall be suspended as hereinbefore provided if and when the Commissioners or their designated agent are satisfied that the judgment debtor has failed to comply with the terms of the court order.

Whenever any motor vehicle, after the passage of this act, shall be operated upon the public highways of the District of Columbia by any person other than the owner, with the consent of the owner, express or implied, the operator thereof shall, in case of accident, be deemed to be the agent of the owner of such motor vehicle, and the proof of the ownership of said motor vehicle shall be prima facie evidence that such person operated said motor vehicle with the consent of the owner.

If any such motor-vehicle owner or operator shall not be a resident of the District of Columbia, the privilege of operating any motor vehicle in the District of Columbia and the privilege of operation within the District of Columbia of any motor vehicle owned by him shall be withdrawn, while any final judgment procured against him for damages, including personal injury or death caused by the operation of any motor vehicle, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, shall be unstayed, unsatisfied, and subsisting, for more than 30 days, and until he shall have given proof of his ability to respond in damages for future accidents as required in section 4 of this act.

The operation by a nonresident or by his agent of a motor vehicle on any public highway of the District of Columbia shall be deemed equivalent to an appointment by such nonresident of the director of vehicles and traffic or his successor in office to be his true and lawful attorney upon whom may be served all lawful processes in any action or proceedings against such nonresident growing out of any accident or collision in which said nonresident or his agent may be involved while operating a motor vehicle on any such public highway, and said operation shall be a signification of his agreement that any such process against him, which is so served, shall be of the same legal force and validity as if served upon him personally in the District of Columbia. Service of such process shall be made by leaving a copy of the process with a fee of $2 in the hands of the director of vehicles and traffic or in his office, and such service shall be sufficient service upon the said nonresident: Provided, That the plaintiff in such action shall first file in the court in which said action is commenced an undertaking in form and amount, and with one or more sureties, approved by said court, to reimburse the defendant, on the failure of the plaintiff to prevail in the action, for the expenses necessarily incurred by the defendant, including a reasonable attorney's fee in an amount to be fixed by the said court, in defending the action in the District of Columbia: And provided further, That notice of such service and a copy of the process are forthwith sent by registered mail by the plaintiff, or his attorney, to the defendant, and the defendant's return receipt appended to the writ and entered with the declaration, or such notice of such service and a copy of the process may be served upon the defendant in the manner provided by section 105 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia. The court in which the action is pending may order such continuances as may be necessary to afford the defendant a reasonable opportunity to defend the action, and no judgment by default in any such action shall be granted until at least 20 days shall have elapsed after service upon the defendant, as hereinabove provided, of a copy of the process and notice of service of said process upon the director of vehicles and traffic.

SEC. 4. Proof of ability to respond in damages when required by this act may be evidenced by the written certificate or certificates of any insurance carrier, duly authorized to do business within the District of Columbia, or in the case of a nonresident by an insurance carrier authorized to transact business in any of the several States, that it has issued to or for the benefit of the person named therein a motor-vehicle liability policy or policies as defined in this act which, at the date of said certificate or certificates, is in full force and effect and designating therein by explicit description or by other appropriate reference all motor vehicles with respect to which coverage is granted by the policy certified to. The said Commissioners or their designated agent shall not accept any certificate or certificates unless the same shall cover all motor vehicles registered in the name of the person furnishing such proof. Additional certificates as aforesaid shall be required as a condition precedent to the registration of any additional motor vehicle or motor vehicles in the name of such person required to furnish proof as aforesaid. Said certificate or certificates shall certify that the motor-vehicle liability policy or policies therein cited shall not be canceled except upon 10 days' prior written notice thereof to the said Commissioners or their designated agent.

Such proof may be the bond of a surety company duly authorized to do business within the District of Columbia or a bond with at least two individual sureties, each owning unencumbered real estate in the District of Columbia, approved by a judge of a court of record, and filed with the said Commissioners or their designated agent, which said bond shall be conditioned for the payment of the amounts specified in section 2 hereof and shall not be cancelable except after 10 days' written notice to the said Commissioners or their designated agent. Such bond in the case where individual sureties are offered shall contain a schedule of the real estate of said sureties and shall constitute a lien in favor of the District of Columbia upon said real estate, which lien shall exist in favor of any holder of any final judgment thereafter rendered on account of damage to property over $100 in amount or injury to any person or persons caused by the operation of such person's motor vehicle. Said bond shall be recorded by the principal named therein among the land records of the District of Columbia before the same is filed with the Commissioners or their designated agent. If a final judgment rendered after the filing of the bond as aforesaid against the principal named in the surety or real-estate bond for damages sustained to person or property while said bond remains in force or effect shall not be satisfied within 30 days after its rendition, the judgment creditor may, for his own use and benefit and at his sole expense, bring an action in the name of the District of Columbia against the company or persons executing such bond.

Such proof of ability to respond in damages may also be evidence presented to the said Commissioners or their designated agent of a deposit by such person with the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia of a sum of money, the amount of which money shall be $11,000. The said clerk shall accept such deposit and issue a receipt therefor. But the said clerk shall not accept a deposit of money where any judgment or judgments, therefore recovered against such person as a result of damages arising from the operation of any motor vehicle, shall not have been paid in full. Such money shall be held by the said clerk to satisfy, in accordance with the provisions of this act, any execution issued against such person in any suit arising out of damage caused by the operation of any motor vehicle owned or operated by such person. Money so deposited shall not be subject to attachment or execution unless such attachment or execution shall arise out of a suit for damages, including injury to property, and personal injury or death, as a result of the operation of a motor vehicle.

SEC. 5. The said Commissioners or their designated agent shall be notified of the cancelation or expiration of any motor-vehicle liability policy of insurance certified under the provisions of this act or of any surety or real-estate bond at least 10 days before the effective date of such cancelation or expiration. In the absence of such notice of cancelation or expiration said policy of insurance shall remain in full force and effect. Upon receipt of such notice of cancelation or expiration the said Commissioners or their designated agent shall require other evidence of ability to respond in damages, and upon failure to furnish the same before the effective date of such cancelation or expiration the operator's permit and all of the registration certificates of the person failing to comply herewith shall be suspended by the Commissioners or their designated agent and shall remain so suspended until such other evidence of ability to respond in damages shall have been given.

SEC. 6. The director of vehicles and traffic shall, upon request, furnish any insurer, person, or surety a certified abstract of the operating record of any person subject to the provisions of this act, which abstract shall fully designate the motor vehicles, if any, registered in the name of such person, and if there shall be no record of any conviction of such person of a violation of any provision of any statute or regulation relating to the operation of a motor vehicle or of any injury or damage caused by such person as herein provided the said director shall so certify. The said director shall collect for each such certificate the sum of $1.

SEC. 7. The director of vehicles and traffic shall furnish any person who may have been injured in person or property by any motor vehicle, upon written request, with all information of record in his office pertaining to the evidence of the ability of any operator or owner of any motor vehicle to respond in damages.

SEC. 8. Any operator or any owner whose operator's permit or certificate of registration shall have been suspended as herein provided shall immediately return to the director of vehicles and traffic his operator's permit, certificate of registration, and the number plates issued thereunder. If any person shall fail to return to the said director the operator's permit, certificate of registration, and the number plates issued thereunder as provided herein, the said director shall forthwith direct any member of the Metropolitan Police of the District of Columbia to secure possession thereof and to return the same to the office of the said director. Any person failing to return on demand such operator's permit or such certificate and number plates shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100, and each day such person shall fail to return the same shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 9. The said Commissioners or their designated agent may cancel such bond or return such evidence of insurance, or the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may, with the consent of the said Commissioners or their designated agent, return such money to the person furnishing the same, provided 3 years shall have elapsed since the filing of such evidence or the making of such deposit, during which period such person shall not have violated any provision of the traffic acts referred to in section 2, and provided no suit or judgment for damages on account of personal injury or damage to property in excess of $100 resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle by him or his agent shall then be outstanding against such person; and the affidavit of such person that he has not so violated the motor vehicle laws and that there are then outstanding against him no suits or judgments for damages as aforesaid, shall be sufficient proof thereof in the absence of evidence to the contrary then before the Commissioners or their designated agent. The said Commissioners or their designated agent may direct the return of any money to the person who furnished the same upon the acceptance and substitution of other evidence of his ability to respond in damages, or, at any time after 3 years from the expiration of the latest registration or permit issued to such person, provided no written notice shall have been filed with the director stating that such suit had been brought against such person by reason of the ownership, maintenance, or operation of a motor vehicle and upon the filing by such person with the said Commissioners or their designated agent of an affidavit that he has abandoned his residence in the District of Columbia or that he has made bona fide sale of any and all motor vehicles owned by him and does not intend to own or operate any motor vehicle in the District of Columbia for a period of one or more years.

SEC. 10. Any person who by any other law of the District of Columbia is required to make provision for the payment of loss occasioned by injury to or death of persons or damage to property shall, to the extent of such provision so made and not otherwise, be exempt from this act.

SEC. 11. Any person who shall forge or, without authority, sign any evidence of ability to respond in damages as required by the said Commisisoners or their designated agent in the administration of this act shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed 1 year, or both.

SEC. 12. "Motor-vehicle liability policy", as used in this act, shall be taken to mean a policy of liability insurance issued to the person therein named as insured by an insurance carrier authorized to transact business in the District of Columbia, or in the case of a nonresident, by an insurance carrier authorized to transact business in any of the several States, which policy shall designate, by explicit description or by appropriate reference, all motor vehicles with respect to which coverage is intended to be granted by said policy, and shall insure the insured named therein and any other person using or responsible for the use of any such motor vehicle with the consent, express or implied, of such insured, against loss from the liability imposed upon such insured by law or upon such other person for injury to or death of any person, other than such person or persons as may be covered, as respects such injury or death by any workmen's compensation law, or damage to property except property of others in charge of the insured or the insured's employees growing out of the maintenance, use, or operation of any such motor vehicle in the United States of America; or which policy shall, in the alternative, insure the person therein named as insured against loss from the liability imposed by law upon such insured for injury to or death of any person, other than such person or persons as may be covered as respects such injury or death by any workmen's compensation law, or damage to property, except property of others in charge of the insured or the insured's employees, growing out of the operation or use by such insured of any motor vehicle, except a motor vehicle registered in the name of such insured, and occurring while such insured is personally in control, as driver or occupant, of such motor vehicle within the United States of America, to the amount or limit of $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs, on account of injury to or death of any one person, and, subject to the same limit as respects injury to or death of one person, of $10,000, exclusive of interest and costs, on account of any one accident resulting in injury to or death of more than one person; and of $1,000 for damage to property of others, as herein provided, resulting from any one accident; or a binder pending the issuance of any such policy, or an endorsement to an existing policy as hereinafter provided: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as preventing such insurance carrier from granting any lawful coverage in excess of or in addition to the coverage herein provided for, nor from embodying in such policy any agreements, provisions, or stipulations not contrary to the provisions of this act and not otherwise contrary to law: Provided, however, That separate concurrent policies covering, respectively, (a) personal injury or death, as aforesaid, and (b) property damage, as aforesaid, shall be considered a motor-vehicle liability policy within the meaning of this act.

No motor-vehicle liability policy shall be issued or delivered in the District of Columbia until a copy of the form of policy shall have been on file with the superintendent of insurance for at least 30 days, unless sooner approved in writing by the superintendent of insurance, nor if within said period of 30 days the superintendent of insurance shall have notified the carrier in writing that in his opinion, specifying the reasons therefor, the form of policy does not comply with the laws of the District of Columbia. The superintendent of insurance shall approve any form of policy which discloses the name, address, and business of the insured, the coverage afforded by such policy, the premium charged therefor, the policy period, the limit of liability, and the agreement that the insurance thereunder is provided in accordance with the coverage defined in this section as respects personal injury and death or property damage, or both, and is otherwise subject to all the provisions of the act.

Such motor-vehicle liability policy shall be subject to the following provisions, which need not be contained therein:

(a) The liability of any company under a motor-vehicle liability policy shall become absolute whenever loss or damage covered by said policy occurs, and the satisfaction by the insured of a final judgment for such loss or damage shall not be a condition precedent to the right or duty of the carrier to make payment on account of such loss or damage. No such policy shall be canceled or annulled as respects any loss or damage by any agreement between the carrier and the insured after the said insured has become responsible for such loss or damage, and any such cancelation or annulment shall be void. Upon the recovery of a final judgment against any person for any such loss or damage, if the judgment debtor was at the accrual of the cause of action insured against liability therefor under a motor-vehicle liability policy, the judgment creditor shall be entitled to have the insurance money applied to the satisfaction of the judgment. But the policy may provide that the insured, or any other person covered by the policy, shall reimburse the company for payments made on account of any accident, claim, or suit involving a breach of the terms, provisions, or conditions of the policy; and further, if the policy shall provide for limits in excess of the limits designated in this section, the insurance carrier may plead against such judgment creditor, with respect to the amount of such excess limits of liability, any defenses which it may be entitled to plead against the insured. Any such policy may further provide for the prorating of the insurance thereunder with other applicable valid and collectible insurance.

(b) The policy, the written application therefor (if any), and any rider or endorsement which shall not conflict with the provisions of this act shall constitute the entire contract between the parties.

(c) The insurance carrier shall, upon the request of the insured, deliver to the insured for filing, or at the request of the insured shall file direct, with the said Commissioners or their designated agent an appropriate certificate as set forth in section 4 hereof.

(d) Any carrier authorized to issue motor-vehicle liability policies as provided for in this act may, pending the issuance of such a policy, execute an agreement, to be known as a binder; or may, in lieu of such a policy, issue an endorsement to an existing policy, each of which shall be construed to provide indemnity or protection in like manner and to the same extent as such a policy. The provisions of this section shall apply to such binders and endorsements.

SEC. 13. The following words, as used in this act, shall have the following meanings:

(a) The singular shall include the plural. The masculine shall include the feminine and neuter, as requisite.

(b) "Person" shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, receivers, referees, trustees, executors, and administrators; and shall also include the owner of any motor vehicle as requisite, but shall not include the District of Columbia.

(c) "Motor vehicle" shall include trailers, motorcycles, and tractors.

(d) "Public highway" shall include any street, road, or public thoroughfare.

SEC. 14. The said Commissioners shall make rules and regulations necessary for the administration of this act.

SEC. 15. Nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the plaintiff in any action at law from relying for security upon the other processes provided by law.

SEC. 16. If any part, subdivision, or section of this act shall be deemed unconstitutional, the validity of its remaining provisions shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 17. This act shall go into effect 90 days after its passage and approval by the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

MUNITIONS INDUSTRY

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, at the last session of the Congress the Senate authorized and commanded the appointment of a select committee of seven Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, which committee was ordered by this body as follows:

(a) To investigate the activities of individuals, firms, associations, and of corporations, and all other agencies in the United States engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, import, or export of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the nature of the industrial and commercial organizations engaged in the manufacture of or traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the methods used in promoting or effecting the sale of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the quantities of arms, munitions, or other implements of war imported into the United States, and the countries of origin thereof, and the quantities exported from the United States and the countries of destinations thereof; and

(b) To investigate and report upon the adequacy or inadequacy of existing legislation, and of the treaties to which the United States is a party, for the regulation and control of the manufacture of and traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war within the United States, and of the traffic therein between the United States and other countries; and

(c) To review the findings of the War Policies Commission and to recommend such specific legislation as may be deemed desirable to accomplish the purposes set forth in such findings and in the preamble to this resolution; and

(d) To inquire into the desirability of creating a Government monopoly in respect to the manufacture of armaments and munitions and other implements of war, and to submit recommendations thereon.

I have set out these instructions and limitations at the outset of my remarks because I do not believe that it is possible to have a clear conception of the nature and scope of the investigation which has been in progress under the direction of your select committee unless we also have clearly outlined in our minds the outlines and extent of the subject which has been expressly confided by the Senate to that agency.

For one who has not fully considered or carefully kept in mind the extent of the inquiry directed by this body, it is easy to fall into the error which has been sedulously cultivated in the land by munition makers and their satellites that the committee has exceeded its jurisdiction in the inquiry so far as it has yet progressed; or else into the opposite but equally fatal error of believing that the jurisdiction of your committee is so limited that its purpose has been accomplished, and that it should now give way to some new agency constituted for the purpose of hastily throwing together legislation to be submitted to the Congress. These views are equally mistaken and, in my judgment, equally fatal to the accomplishment of the broad, humanitarian designs for the welfare of our own country and the world, which the Senate must have had in mind in the creation of the select committee, because those designs run through every sentence and clause of the resolution authorizing the committee.

Mr. President, I am very proud of the fact that I was honored by you by appointment as one of the members of this committee. I am very proud of the opportunity of being associated with my colleagues on the committee in what I regard as a great work for our country and for humanity. I am proud of the singleness of purpose which has actuated the members of the committee from the day of our appointment; the lack of political or factional dissension. I am infinitely proud of the very essential results which already have been obtained on a relatively very small appropriation in disclosing facts which should materially sway the judgment of all mankind on the greatest problem which confronts the peoples of the world—that of the prevention of war.

Boy and man, I have witnessed investigations at this end of the Capitol and the other for nearly as many years as I am old. I should like to say in justice to my colleagues on the committee that this committee has been able to go far with little expenditure because there has been no minority on the committee—no minority, I mean, in the sense that there has been no one on the committee out of sympathy with the Senate's mandate, no one on the committee actuated by desire to protect some special interest and to prevent the committee from hewing to the line and letting the chips fall where they might. There has never been a dispute on the committee as to the course our investigation should take, and no attempt has ever been made from within the committee to protect any favored interest or favored individual from the disclosure of any essential facts which could shed light on the recommendations which we are instructed to make to the Senate. Let me also pay tribute in passing to the devotion of my colleagues, who, during the recess of Congress, might have remained at home or vacationed in other parts of the Nation or traveled in other lands on official or semiofficial business or individually, but who chose through many weeks to pursue a very laborious and wearisome investigation in the hope that the facts adduced might be of ultimate importance in the prevention of war.

The occasion for my remarks today is the fact that the committee has exhausted, and more than exhausted, the very moderate authorization of funds which was granted us at the last session. I violate no confidence when I say their very small and very efficient staff worked without compensation during the last month of our vitally important hearings because they themselves believed in the importance of the investigation, as the committee did, and because they were willing to take a risk on the belief of the Senate that their labors had been justifiable and entitled to compensation.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], chairman of the committee, has by direction of the committee presented a resolution to the Senate authorizing a further appropriation of public funds for the completion of this investigation. It is to that proposition that I address myself at this time. I should like to make it clear at the outset that while, so far as I know, there has been no difference of opinion on the committee whatever as to the importance of our investigation up to date or of the necessity for pursuing it to its ultimate conclusion wherever the quest may lead, in what I shall say as to the results of the investigation or the conclusions to be drawn from the testimony so far adduced I speak only for myself. I speak today on my own responsibility as a Member of the Senate and a member of the committee as to the reasons which actuate me in asking the Senate to continue this investigation by a further grant of funds. My colleagues on the committee are entirely capable of expressing their own reasons, as they will, for arriving at the same result. The thing which I wish to make abundantly clear is that there has never been even any discussion, much less a consensus of opinion, as to what the recommendations of the committee will be.

Mr. President, it has been my conception since the passage by the Senate of the resolution authorizing the appointment of our committee that the scope of our authority had to do with the question of the prevention of war—the noblest conception of all time so far as nations are concerned. By the very terms of the resolution we were directed to investigate the question of the influence of private profit on war. For what purpose? To limit private profit in war, to prevent the extortionate profiteering from which our Nation suffered in the last war, is, I grant, a desirable object in itself; but when compared with the terrific wastes of youth and life and blood and treasure which inevitably accompany war, it is very small. My theory in voting for the resolution was that it might contribute in some degree to ferreting out the processes by which men who do not fight wars but grow rich through other men's sacrifices foment the very discords through which they grow fat and swollen. My theory was, and is, that it was the intention of the Senate—certainly I know that it was the intention back of that swelling tide of public sentiment in the Nation which forced the adoption of the resolution—to find out as exactly as might be the extent to which greed for private profit contributes to the possibility of the United Sates being engaged in war.

In other words, Mr. President, I believe that there has been great confusion of thought between the idea of limitation on war profits as a measure of national economy and the absolute elimination of profit or increased compensation to any corporation or individual in the event of war. One has to do with economy in time of war, the other with the prevention of war.

I believe that altogether too much attention has been paid to the moral as against the economic side of war. All sensible men and women in the world have been agreed for many years on the immorality of war. Yet we continually glorify war.

A few weeks ago we celebrated Armistice Day. Throughout all the allied countries bands blared, troops marched, men and women in uniform paraded, salutes were fired, orators paid eloquent tribute to the memory of the dead and the heroism of our troops. This was well. I participated in some of the exercises myself. The heroism of the participants in that great struggle, the memories of the dead, the claims of the living sufferers from its dread effects should never be forgotten.

I say with the greatest possible earnestness that in my judgment the greatest service that can be rendered to all those who suffered in the great war—civil or military, young or old, alive or dead—is a frank exposure of the absolute needlessness of that struggle and of the sacrifices that were made then and of the misery that is still following in its train of consequences. This involves the proposition of a consideration of the identities and activities of men who profited from the war to the extent of hundreds of millions and came out with whole hides. And this again leads us nowhere unless we pursue it to the extent of finding out the system by which men may again make many millions of profits out of war by contract, while young lads are being drafted and killed for a dollar a day, or whatever the country pleases to pay them.

Mr. President, of course, we all know of the horrors of the World War, of the vast outpouring of blood and treasure, of the sacrifice of youth, the breaking down of morale, the engendering of hate, the desolation of territory, the destruction of all laws. We who sit in this body know that since 1918 the whole world has been passing through the fiery furnace of the aftermath of war. When that great cataclysm was nominally ended—and it has never been more than nominally ended, because its economic and moral effects are still marching on—bankruptcy or its equivalent was on every hand; international credit, even international honesty, had been so seriously undermined as almost to be completely destroyed; loss of morale, suspicions, animosities, jealousies, rancorous hates were on every hand. No competent economist who studies the calamitous events of the last two decades can fail to realize that in the largest and most tragic sense we are still today paying the bill for the Great War in the starvation, misery, and death which the present awful depression has imposed upon the nations of the earth. We are still paying the price in innocent suffering for the madness which engulfed the world.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that too much attention has been paid, and to too little avail, to the moral phases of war and too little to the economic phases. The moral arguments cannot be controverted but have come to be considered as platitudes more to be recognized in the breach than in the observance. There has not been in modern times any moral justification for war between civilized nations. No moralist or philosopher worthy of the name has ever been able to defend it. The peoples of the world have universally abhorred it. Yet when the greed for gain of the few or the wiles of ambitious politicians have again sent the youth of the lands to the shambles, the fanfare of military music, the promise of glory, and the fiery exhortations of patriotism have overcome these moral scruples.

In more modern times no nation has admittedly waged a war of aggression. Invariably the plea is "for the defense of the fatherland", even if it involves the wanton invasion of foreign territory. No armament program is ever authorized by any parliament or congress for purposes of offense. The staggering military and naval budgets which have steadily led to the economic enslavement of the greater portion of the world's population are, in every country, jammed through under the cloak of the pretext of "national defense." The universal recognition of the immorality of war has not prevented the development of the familiar condition of competitive armaments which must of necessity—and, as a matter of fact, does—create war.

Let me today, Mr. President, for a few brief moments, as a preliminary to the proper discussion of the testimony already adduced before our committee, emphasize the economic as well as the moral vice of war. Too few of us have realized that the doctrine of "peace on earth, good will toward men" represents not only the greatest moral declaration of all time but the greatest economic necessity ever expressed.

The nations of the earth must finally subscribe either to the principle of war and want or they must subscribe to the doctrine of peace and plenty. So long as the world expects and prepares for wars, it will have them. But even if it were true that preparation for war would end war—a proposition denied by the whole history of the world—the present rate of expenditure for armament will soon absolutely bankrupt the world, even without the aid of another war.

Yet men are so filled with fear by the propaganda of armament makers that it is commonly said that peace is an idealistic conception of which there is yet no hope of attainment. When men say that the time is not yet come for stopping armament expenditures, they are saying that the time has not yet come for economic recovery. Nations can and will insist on saving expenditures on armament when their peoples realize that the profits of munition makers are the chief cause of their poverty.

In the course of the hearings of our committee it has constantly been asserted and reasserted, directly and indirectly, by the representatives of our greatest munition manufacturers that war is inevitable and unescapable. It is even intimated that those who in the event of war would lurk behind the lines manufacturing munitions in the expectation of reaping hundreds of millions of dollars in war profits are more truly patriotic than those of us, more humbly placed, who could not possibly make a penny's worth of profit out of war, but who are the fathers and mothers of lads who would be tossed into the bloody maw of war to make those great profits possible, and who therefore desire, so far as may be in their power, to reduce that possibility to the minimum. They say that the abolition of war is impossible. I am not yet, I hope, an old man. Yet in my own generation, I can recall when that great scientist, Dr. Langley, was laughed to his death for his conception that men might fly through the air. But we have witnessed the conquest of the air by man in a few brief years. I can remember, as a small boy, the time when the submarine was considered merely an interesting experiment, whose possibility had been demonstrated, but the practicability of which was most vigorously disputed. I can well recall the day when, as a lad of tender years, I was privileged to tag along behind a delegation from this body and a larger delegation from the other House which journeyed down to the Peace Monument at the foot of Capitol Hill to witness, in open-mouthed wonder, a demonstration of the so-called "horseless carriage." Yet we have all lived to see the automobile encompass the earth. We have seen smallpox, that dreaded plague, conquered and brought under absolute control. We have seen the fearful threat of yellow fever nearly eliminated from the world by the heroism and genius of Walter Reed and Gorgas and their associates. We have seen the sinister international trade in narcotics, not, unhappily, absolutely abolished but reduced to a minimum by determined international cooperative effort. Are we, then, to say to a generation which has witnessed such remarkable advances in the field of science, of medicine, of bacteriology, and of law that advancement in the elimination of the greatest curse of mankind is a chimerical dream?

The latent fear of another war must be dissipated before the world can truly move forward to economic recovery. No matter what steps are taken to improve our national and international monetary and trade relations, they will not long endure while the fear of war still bulks large in the background of human affairs.

Scarcely a thoughtful man in business or public life today fails to realize that fear of war is always at hand to shatter the carefully prepared plans for economic recovery of the peoples of every land.

If any large industry found itself in financial difficulties, faced with ruin, and discovered a tremendous waste which, if stopped, could be immediately converted into profit, the stockholders of the corporation would be entitled to hold the management liable if it did not take steps to effect this saving and prevent bankruptcy. In that same sense the peoples of the world are entitled to say that their governments are grossly incompetent when they continue to squander the savings of the people, past and future, on armament. Who of us can deny that the governments of the world are collectively incompetent so long as they permit the continuation of this condition, fraught with so much of tragedy and misery to mankind? Any bona fide effort, backed by real public sentiment on the part of two or three of the great nations, would stop this criminal and senseless waste of the people's wealth on preparation for war. This effort has never really been made, as is completely illustrated in the last Naval Disarmament Conference, when all the negotiators, surrounded in each case by professional naval advisers, devoted themselves throughout to endeavoring to see how much concession each could get for his own armament rather than in bona fide efforts to disarm.

Past expenditures for armament have nearly bankrupted all the principal nations of the world, and continued expenditures on the present increasing scale will soon complete bankruptcy without war. If another war shall come, the very survival of civilization will be at stake.

Spending more and more for armament each year by any country means only that other countries will retaliate in kind by spending more and more; and thus the vicious circle has widened to encompass the economic destruction of nearly the entire world. We have only to go back to the years immediately preceding the World War for absolute confirmation of this statement. No one who has studied the diplomatic correspondence made public since the war, through the fall of the Governments of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia can doubt that the naval-building competition between England and Germany, and the increasingly grandiose mobilization schemes of France and Russia on the one hand, and Germany and Austria on the other, were primary causes of the conflict. The very preparedness which had been urged in every nation as a purely defensive measure made war inevitable when once the spark was supplied by the murder of the Austrian Archduke.

Any business faced with financial difficulties must almost invariably do one of two things in order to survive. It must increase its income to more than its losses by increased volume of business, or it must decrease its expenses so that its outgo is less than its income. First of all it will, if possible, reduce its overhead.

The overhead of every nation in the world today is expenditure for war—for war past, present, and future. In normal times more than three-fourths of our Budget consists in paying the debts of past wars and getting ready for future wars. In a very real sense nearly all the unprecedentedly large, extraordinary expenditures being made by the Government at this period are properly chargeable to war. The nations which proclaim themselves too poverty-stricken to pay any portion of their just debts incurred by the borrowing of actual cash from us, are yet able to spend staggering sums in getting ready for another war. In this country there is bitter assertion that the immediate payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates—an obligation now grown stale in many quarters as a reminder of debts still owing on the last war—would bankrupt the Government. Yet at the same time it is seriously proposed in high quarters that we double our already stupendous appropriations on armament in prospect of the next war, to create a new set of veterans and veterans' problems. The propaganda of munition manufacturers is never directed toward paying the debts of former wars but always to selling newer and vaster weapons for wars and threats of wars in the future.

Figures for armament in the world at the present time are doubtful in their accuracy and difficult of determination, owing to the varying rate of exchange and the habit of nations concealing large portions of their lay-out for arms, as well as the existence of vast "private" or unofficial armies now being maintained in several European countries, whose costs do not appear in the official government budgets. But from the best figures available, based largely on the League of Nations' yearbook, the world expenditures for armament last year were certainly not less than five and may exceed seven billions of dollars.

Employment and plenty in any land depend upon industrial and agricultural prosperity, which in turn depends upon credit. Credit is the creature of thrift. No man can assert that it is thrift to waste five to seven billion dollars a year upon armament—to say nothing of the extremely dangerous effects of such expenditures in actually producing wars.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. What will be the probable military and naval expenditures of this Government for the next fiscal year?

Mr. CLARK. I am not able to estimate the probability, but I have seen repeated statements that estimates were to be submitted practically doubling the expenditure of the United States for both military and naval purposes.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. In the most recent issue of the Army and Navy Journal I notice that the budget of the Army and the Navy this year calls for $899,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. I understood that such expenditures were to be so increased that they would run close to $1,000,000,000.

Mr. CLARK. I think when the various elements attributable to the Army and Navy are considered, not only the Army and Navy themselves but other elements which enter into the purchase of munitions, the budget for this year will be well above $1,000,000,000.

Mr. President, little serious effort has yet been made to approach the subject of war from a merely business standpoint. Few attempts have been made to bring home the problem from the angle of mere dollars and cents. Until recently few efforts have been made to point out the dire effects of the munition makers' trade on the continuation of wars.

War is bad business because economically war is dope. Like dope it offers to the economic system temporary stimulation, brief periods of false and feverish activity, artificial markets, soaring prices, spurious flights of industry. Like dope it has its awful morning after.

We awake to find the horrible reaction of our horrible sleigh ride—our financial nervous system wrecked, our currencies trodden under heel, our soaring prices crashed, and our fictitious markets collapsed. Nations are left clogged with unemployment and dislocated labor, clogged with overproduction from the false stimulation of war, from the maldistribution of gold, and from the frantic and hopeless post-war efforts to keep oversized plants running to capacity to pay interest upon useless and unproductive war expansions.

War and depression—ugly, misshapen, inseparable twins—must be considered together. Each is a catapult for the other. The present world-wide depression is a direct result of the World War. Every war in history has been followed by a major depression. Nearly every war in history has been instigated in times of depression by the few who have vested interests in the profits of war. Together war and depression form a vicious circle whirling the welfare of mankind and the good things of life to oblivion.

Without pausing now to inquire as to the manner in which the cycle originated, it is vital that we recognize fully how depression and war are inextricably linked that both must be eliminated to insure prosperity and progress.

There is no aspect of war that is not bad business except to a handful of armament and munition manufacturers. Even in their case it can be shown that for the most part even the sorry profits of the war traffic are largely illusory in the long run and that those businesses which depend chiefly upon war contracts are highly speculative enterprises, ulcers and centers of contagion in every nation's economic body. Like dope, war is a false stimulant for every kind of business, but it is only that and nothing more.

We awakened to find that by the end of the war the United States had cast away without hope of recompense over 10 percent of our carefully stored-up national wealth; that England had squandered over 30 percent of hers, France 50 percent, Germany 50 percent.

The total sum of the world's real essential wealth which was dissipated will probably never be accurately ascertained. The best estimates of the direct and recognized loss in money values range between one hundred and eighty and one hundred and ninety-five billions. Perhaps the very careful and well documented estimate of one hundred and eighty-six billions in the study on Direct and Indirect Costs of the Great World War by the Carnegie Foundation for Industrial Peace, under the direction of Professor Bogart, of the University of Illinois, is as nearly accurate as any may be. But Professor Bogart and certain eminent European statisticians have estimated that if the indirect cost be added, including the employment of the ordinary actuarial rules of the countries involved for loss of life and incapacity to work because of wounds, the total cost is not less than $337,000,000,000—a sum exceeding the entire estimated wealth of the United States.

The number of civilians who directly and indirectly lost their lives as a result of the conflict involves so many complications that it may be fairly said to defy accurate computation. An able and exhaustive study by Prof. Trebinann Hersh, professor of statistics at the University of Geneva, estimates the loss of life among civilians, directly and indirectly caused by the war, to be above twenty-eight millions, and he estimates the total casualties of the World War to be approximately forty-two millions.

Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, the American member of the Supreme War Council, once said that all of the causes of the World War could be summed up in one: "Too many men wandering around Europe with guns in their hands."

Yet today, 16 years after the armistice, there are at least a million and a half more men under arms in Europe than there were in 1914. Outlay for armament has leaped year by year by the hundred of millions until it is now certainly not less than five billions, and may reach a much larger figure.

The powder magazine has again been prepared for war. The train is laid. Any casual spark may set it off. Yet the whole world stands by complacently viewing the possibility of another catastrophe which might well mean the actual obliteration of our civilization.

The last war was the most horrible in all history. That the next will be still more terrible and destructive no one who has even casually observed the advance of modern science and listened even for a moment to the predictions of military experts can doubt. In terms of the war system the era of coal is past; the World War was fought in the petroleum age; the next combat will be waged amid the unpredictable horrors of the electrical era.

Already we have weapons many times more deadly than those in use in the last war. The mechanization of armies has opened undreamed-of possibilities in land armaments—swarming fleets of tanks and armored cars; airplanes filling the air like locusts by the thousands, faster than the wind; winged arsenals, piercing far behind the lines into metropolitan centers and industrial districts, carrying the horrors of war home to civilian noncombatants; newer and more deadly gases; more destructive shells and bombs; faster ships, remote control.

It is easily conceivable that pilotless planes, controlled by radio from a distance, could carry the new bombs to cities far back of the line. One of the larger bombs can destroy a whole block of houses, even if it only hits in the vicinity. Small bombs can destroy factories, office buildings, schools, hospitals, or apartments with one direct hit. In another war we may look to see shrapnel rain in every street. Incendiary bombs, light in weight because they require no penetrating power, can be rained upon cities in such number that they will become flaming infernos.

Gas bombs would cover whole cities and countrysides with mantles of death. A distinguished French physicist has estimated that 100 airplanes, each carrying 1 ton of gas, could cover Paris with a blanket of gas 120 feet thick. One hour's work on a still day to annihilate the population of a great city!

An eminent German soldier, Lieutenant General Altrock, has frankly stated the prospects for another war in these words:

> The population over a large area may expect destruction at any moment. The next war will take the form of mass murder of the civilian population rather than a conflict between armies.

The last war abundantly proved that any weapons whatever will be availed of by nations struggling desperately for existence, no matter what their character. The next war will see, in addition to the horrors of poison gas, the unknown terrors of bacteriological warfare—planes dashing across a continent or a sea dropping mass cultures of plague and influenza, cholera, and typhus, supplementing machine-gun fire with streptococci, and adding new classifications to the traffic in munitions.

For the statesmen of the world to permit the present insane competition in armaments to continue, with the certainty that it precipitate in this generation or the next another catclysm of unpredictable horrors, is stupendous and incredible folly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the able Senator from Missouri if his committee—on which he is rendering such excellent service, and which is itself serving this Government so splendidly—is giving consideration to the question of whether the Government of the United States should take charge of or supervise and control the manufacture of armaments in America?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that that is one of the subjects specifically confided to the consideration of the committee by the Senate resolution creating the committee, and one of the subjects upon which we are instructed to make a recommendation to the Senate. There has been no consideration in the committee as a whole as to the conclusions to be drawn in that regard from the testimony heretofore adduced. We simply have not yet reached that point.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the Senator's reply.

Mr. CLARK. The theory so often advanced in armament propaganda—that the best way for a nation to be insured of peace is for it constantly to outdo its neighbors in preparation for war—is contrary to the entire experience of mankind. No sane man would pretend that the best way to preserve peace among individuals is for each to go at all times armed to the teeth. Trivial misunderstandings, petty quarrels, inconsequential arguments, grow quickly into bloodshed when each disputant has ready to his hand deadly weapons which, though perhaps intended for defense, may be as readily turned to purposes of offense; and nations are but aggregations of individuals.

Experience has proved that peace treaties, excellent in themselves, cannot be relied upon to prevent war when all parties to any trivial international dispute are in possession of enormous armament. Competitive purchase of armament by nations between whom there may exist natural rivalries is itself a primary cause of war. Disarmament is the only road to permanent peace. That way lies the hope of the world. To that course the statesmanship of the nations must bend its steps. On every other path lurk desolation and madness and despair.

Let me say in passing that we in the United States have been very free to assume an attitude of disdain for the course pursued by other nations in the matter of disarmament, to proclaim our own superiority and our own integrity. It was called to the attention of the Senate by special message from the President at the last session and has been more than once alluded to during the hearings of our committee that a convention for dealing with limitation of armaments was permitted to molder forgotten in the Foreign Relations Committee of this body for a decade. Admitting that the convention was far from perfect, and actually accomplished only a very small step forward in the direction of limitations of arms, the refusal of the Senate to take any action whatever in regard to it has certainly given ground to the suspicion on the part of other nations that we are not as sincere as we have represented ourselves in the matter of the limitation of armament. Any experienced judge or lawyer would, in a similar case between individuals, look askance at our pretensions as an eager suitor in view of the great number of continuances for which we have ourselves been responsible.

Moreover, Mr. President, we have ourselves been by no means free from blame and responsibility for the thwarting of disarmament efforts in other respects. While loudly proclaiming our devotion to the cause of armament reduction, we in the last Congress certainly aroused suspicion throughout the world and probably caused the beginning of another disastrous naval building race by authorizing the squandering, in this time of profound depression, of upward of a billion dollars of the taxpayers' money for the construction of additional warships. Think of the paradox and the madness of money sweated out of the taxpayers of our country, in this time of awful stress, for purposes of reconstruction, being expended for agencies which are particularly designed for and have no other possible purposes than those of destruction!

Progress toward disarmament will be much advanced when the peoples of the world can be made to understand how much the matter of munition makers' profits has entered into the competition in armaments, with its inevitable end in war and ruin.

Mr. President, I cannot say with too great emphasis that as a result not only of my service on the special committee but also as a result of such industrious private research as I have been able to make, it is my profound belief that one of the primary causes of war is the making of private profit out of war. Without the private control of the prime war industries, there would be no active propaganda and promotion of the competitive armaments of nations. Without this insane competition of armaments, the danger of war would be enormously reduced.

At the disarmament conference a few years ago, Arthur Henderson, the great English statesman and publicist, made this statement as showing the effects of the international armaments ring:

> In one town in England there stands as a war memorial a gun captured from the enemy during the Great War. On one part of the gun there is the inscription recording how British troops, with great heroism, captured it in a hard-fought action; on another part of this gun is the name of the British firm by which it had been manufactured!

A multitude of other facts have been slowly coming to light. When the British troops stormed the Dardanelles—one of the most difficult military enterprises in all history—they were fired on by Turks using guns made by a British firm, financed by a French bank. It has been established that French aluminum, exported to Germany through Switzerland, served to kill French soldiers and make possible Zeppelin raids on Paris and London. It has long since been proved that there existed in Switzerland during the World War rolling mills whose chief business was to remove German trade marks from steel in transit from Germany to France.

After the war, Krupp, the great German munitions maker, sued in the British courts to collect from Vickers, the British Armament Trust, royalties for guns manufactured in England for killing German soldiers under licenses which Krupp had granted Vickers for the use of Krupp patents. Rather than go to court, Vickers settled by giving Krupp some Vickers stock. One American submarine firm sued in the Mixed Claims Commission on the ground that over 400 submarines manufactured in Germany during the war—the use of which brought about our entrance into the war—were infringements of the patents for which they had granted licenses to firms in Prussia and Austria.

Schneider-Creusot, the great French Armament Trust, owns Skoda, the vast munitions plant in Czechoslovakia. Through Skoda, Schneider contributed important funds to set up Hitler in Germany. Hitler's conduct of German affairs makes for war scares in France, boosts the French military budget, and enables Schneider to sell more munitions at home. Vickers, the great British Munitions Trust, is closely affiliated with Mitsubishi, of Japan, and Schneider, of France, while Krupp owns stock in Vickers.

The existence of an international munitions ring, with many ramifications, has been generally admitted for a considerable period. This was vividly called to the attention of the Senate at the last session by an article which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] read into the RECORD; but the suggestion for a real investigation of American munition manufacture in its relationship to the international picture, and to our own position with regard to war preparations, was met with the protest that if there were an international munitions ring it was entirely abroad, and no Americans had anything to do with it. Nevertheless, the Senate believed the subject to be of such vital import that it authorized the appointment of the special committee for that purpose.

Mr. President, as I have said, this investigation is far from complete, yet already we have gone far enough to develop facts of the very greatest importance to our country and to the world. Speaking not for the committee but individually I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion the investigation of your committee has already exposed most of the fallacies which have been advanced as arguments for the necessity of the private manufacture of munitions.

The excuses of the armament manufacturer and militarist have always been naive. Alfred Nobel, who established a peace prize out of a fortune made out of profits from the manufacture of dynamite and explosives, once said:

> My factories may end war sooner than your congresses. The day when two army corps will be able to destroy each other in one second all civilized nations will recall in horror and abandon their armies.

With similar sophistry, Hiram Maxim, who invented the machine gun which, without dispute, has killed more people than any machine of death ever invented, said:

> The quick-firing gun is the greatest life-saving device ever invented.

So, in the same sardonic vein, a leading British military expert, Major General Fuller, has written:

> The shifting of danger from the fighting man onto the civilian is likely to cause such a reaction against war that universal peace will be established. It is far more likely that warlike inventions rather than peaceful continents will one day be able to whisper into the ear of this troubled world "pax vobiscum."

According to this sinister philosophy, entire civilian populations must be murdered before anything can be done to stop the moral and economic wastes of war.

Incidentally, the case of Hiram Maxim throws an interesting sidelight on one of the chief contentions of the munition makers, to the effect that private manufacture of munitions is necessary to afford scope to American inventive genius. We would be led to believe that the United States is greatly aided in the preparation for war by the invention of new death-dealing instruments by our citizens. But, unfortunately, it does not work out that way. Inventions of new weapons or processes by Americans are of no especial advantage to the United States in the sense of making us better prepared. Experience has proved—and the testimony in our present investigation has abundantly disclosed—that armament secrets soon become the secrets of every nation in the world—for a price. Maxim invented his machine guns in America but manufactured them in England and sold them and licensed their manufacture around the world. In the World War his invention resulted in the death of thousands of American boys.

An American invented the submarine, but submarines were sold and licensed around the world, and their use was the reason generally assigned for our entrance into the war. We have ascertained that our War and Navy Departments have not only permitted but encouraged the sale of powder manufactured according to the very latest formulas to possible enemies of the United States, and that our leading manufacturers of munitions have been willing to construct plants for foreign nations and to instruct foreigners in the "know how" of munition manufacture. We have seen the plans for the latest quick-firing gun—developed partly at Government expense and with Government personnel—hawked to a foreign government with the consent of the Department itself.

Our committee has found indisputable evidence of the intimate connection of leading American munition firms with leading firms in their own particular lines in the chief countries in the world. We found our greatest firm of submarine manufacturers in practical partnership with Vickers, the great British Munitions Trust, parceling out the world between them with an agreement that whichever got the business in certain territory would split the profit with the other, and with a working agreement with Mitsui of Japan.

It has frequently been urged that private as against Government manufacture of munitions is necessary to supply plant capacity as a stand-by for the Government in time of war, and to supply employment for American labor in time of peace from contracts obtained in other countries. But we have found our armament manufacturers repeatedly soliciting business with the avowed intention of doing the work in factories in Holland, Italy, England, or elsewhere with which they had intimate relationship. In one case we found the American Ambassador to Italy instructed to intercede on behalf of one Italian firm as against another on work to be done for the Italian Government because the real bidder was an American firm, but the work was to be done in an Italian plant utilizing Italian labor. Surely such activities could not build up American plant capacity, nor could they give employment to American labor.

We established the fact that our greatest manufacturer of explosives, dominating the American chemical field behind a vicious embargo, is in practical partnership with Imperial Chemical Industries, the great British Chemical Trust, and with the great Chemical Trust of Germany. We found this great American munition firm ready to construct factories in Japan for the manufacture of the latest form of explosives. And we found this firm actually encouraged by the War and Navy Departments to disclose for cash their latest formulas and processes to nations which were recognized by the Departments as possible prospective enemies of the United States.

We have established the fact that where American inventions or formulas have once been patented or registered in a foreign country and a license to use them, which involves familiarity with their essentials, has passed into the hands of people abroad, they can then be employed in case of war by a foreign government—even against the United States—with or without the consent of the licensee.

We have found that in many parts of the munitions trade corruption of public officials in the sale of the instruments of death was a commonly accepted part of the business.

We had before us a letter from the chief official of a great American munitions concern to his friend and associate, the responsible head of the greatest British munitions manufacturer, in which he said:

> We all know that the real foundation of all South American business is graft.

We have become familiar with such terms as "greasing the ways" and "doing the needful", "performing the necessary" as accepted trade terms of the munitions industry.

We listened to the testimony of the representative of a great American arms manufacturer who unblushingly admitted that he had himself been guilty of the bribery of a Central American high official, that he had reported the matter to his company, and had been neither reprimanded nor discharged.

We found that the Government of the United States itself has been employed in furthering the sale of munitions abroad; that a United States cruiser had been ordered to Constantinople to demonstrate the efficiency of a naval gun, the product of a private factory. We found the project for sending a flotilla of submarines as a sales argument for private manufacturers and demonstration around the coast of South America favorably received by the Chief of Naval Operations. We found the officers of American ships of war on official duties in foreign waters being employed as sales boosters for guns manufactured by Bethlehem Steel. We learned with amazement that American ambassadors and consular officers had been instructed to intercede with foreign governments for the sale of the products of particular munition manufacturers.

We discovered that an official mission of American naval officers had been loaned to Peru, who, in addition to their pay and allowances as American naval officers, had been lavishly paid by the Peruvian Government. The chief service of this mission was to assist in the sale and installation of American submarines in the Peruvian Navy. Incidentally, it was discovered that the particular member of the naval mission whose business it was to inspect the submarines on behalf of Peru was actually selected and detailed upon the recommendation of the company whose submarines were to be inspected. And then, when these submarines had been sold to Peru, we found an officer on the active list of the Navy loaned to Peru's rival and prospective opponent, Colombia, as an adviser on defenses, and there prescribing an American rapid-fire gun as a harbor defense against the very submarine which our naval mission had helped to sell the other country. We learned with shame that this Commander Strong of the Navy had not been above demanding and receiving a commission from the purveyors of munitions at a time when he was drawing a salary from the United States and one from Colombia for rendering disinterested services as an expert. In passing, I may say that in my judgment, if we are to permit the loan of American naval officers to other nations in fiduciary capacities we are under at least a moral obligation to see that they do not plunder the nations to which they are loaned, and at least render honest service to the nations to which they are loaned and from which they are receiving additional compensation.

We learned that American manufacturers of poison gases had engaged in every sort of intrigue in the promotion of revolution in Cuba and South America; that one of them had actually employed an alleged Christian missionary in Central America as an agent and demonstrator of his wares; that another actually had the hardihood to approve and defend before our committee the conduct of one of his agents in taking hapless prisoners from South American dungeons and making them unwilling subjects for demonstrations of his gases.

We read the correspondence of a manufacturer of poison gas, in which he proposed to superintend the erection of poison-gas plants in a South American country, accurately describing the gas which was best for killing and those gases which were best for incapacitating, and we read his offer to train alien armies in the use of these gases. We have been chagrined to learn that this same man has been permitted by the War Department to use his status as a lieutenant colonel in the Reserve Corps of the United States Army and to exploit that official connection as a selling argument for his poison gases. We have examined an elaborate and ornate prospectus for this concern containing all the principal officers in the uniform of the United States Army and containing glowing letters of recommendation to the former head of the Chemical Warfare Service and the present head of the Militia Bureau of the Army—a course calculated to lend the impression to foreigners unfamiliar with our language and institutions that there was some connection between the Government and this poison-gas concern.

Our committee was informed by the most responsible Government officials of the frequently successful efforts on the part of munition manufacturers to evade and defeat the President's embargo on the export of munitions to Bolivia and Paraguay, between which countries war is now raging. We have found that in the present state of our law there is no way in which the Government may defeat such evasions on the part of those who deliberately wish to practice them.

Incidentally, Mr. President, I may say that it was discovered by the committee in the course of its investigation that the obstacle to a bona fide embargo on exportation of arms to the Chaco lies in an obscure clause in a half-forgotten treaty with Bolivia, and by instruction of the Committee on Munitions it is my intention to introduce into this body as soon as it can be prepared a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to denounce that particular clause of that particular treaty in order that he may have an opportunity of enforcing a bona fide embargo.

One of the greatest fields of investigation which has been confided to your special committee is the subject of war profits by industry. We were especially directed to make investigation of that subject. We were especially directed to review the findings of the War Policies Commission.

This has involved an examination of the plans which have been prepared during the last 15 years by the War Plans Division of the War Department in coordination with a similar division in the Navy Department.

In pursuance of this subject we have discovered that one American concern engaged in the manufacture of munitions earned enough profits during the World War to purchase out of its surplus practical control of the largest manufacturer of automobiles in the world. We have demonstrated that war profits running into the hundreds of millions of dollars were earned by that one concern alone.

It has been disclosed that this company, whose stock advanced during the period of the war from approximately $20 a share to approximately a thousand dollars a share, had first and last, and still does have the effrontery to hold itself out as practically a partner of the United States Government; and we found in their correspondence with high officials of the War and Navy Departments practical substantiation of this outrageous assumption; and then we learned that during the most crucial period of the war, while Germany was girding herself for the supreme effort to break through the line, the construction of necessary powder plants for the Government was held up for more than 3 months while the Du Ponts haggled like fishwives with the Government as to the compensation they were to receive for their services in constructing and operating the plant with Government funds. It was testified before our committee by the executives of the Du Pont Co. itself that the dispute with the Government as to compensation was occasioned in part by their insistence on the right to pay huge bonuses to their own executives and their own employees. Yet at that very time American boys were being drafted without any negotiation as to pay for their service at the point of the bayonet; and today the Messrs. du Pont and those with whom they act are contributing funds for propaganda against compensation for services in the last war because it interferes with balancing the Budget in preparation for a future war.

Mr. President, there has been in recent years a great deal of loose talk about eliminating the profit from war by the limitation by contract of profit to a certain fixed return to be based on a percentage of a theoretical valuation of the plant value devoted to the public service. Such a theory, Mr. President, is a delusion and a snare, no matter by whom it may be advocated.

The advocates of such a plan speak of limitation of profit to a percentage of plant value devoted to war manufacture, the value to be based on a period of adjustment. But we have all seen the fixing of rate basis for public utilities complicated by matters of original costs, costs of reproduction new, depreciation, overhead costs during construction, and the myriad other elements which are advanced for consideration lead to nearly interminable delay before commissions and courts. We have had the admission from the War Plans Division of the War Department that after 15 years they have no basis of fact on any single corporation on which the return for that corporation could be figured. It is easily to be seen from this statement how futile and ineffective would be the theory of limiting war profits to a percentage of the capital involved when the country is at war, when a hundred and fifty contracts a day, involving hundreds of millions of dollars, are being negotiated by Government agencies. The mere outline of the proposition is sufficient to show its absurdity.

Another fallacy is the theory commonly advanced for the Government to allow the concerns engaged in war industries to earn huge profits and then to recoup them through the device of excess-profit taxes and high income taxes. But to evidence the ineffectiveness of this method our committee has had before it the case of Mr. Alfred I. du Pont. It has appeared that in the course of 3 years he received an income in excess of $26,000,000, and that during that period he paid no income tax whatever, since he had legally, and without evasion of the law, offset his profits by losses in the stock market. The case of Mr. du Pont abundantly illustrates the fact that when the Government once permits swollen munitions profits to go into the pockets of private individuals it cannot hope to recapture them under our present income-tax system. The way toward the hope of prevention of war certainly lies in the direction of keeping profits out of munition makers' pockets rather than in the hope of recovering them after the munition makers have had a chance to dissipate them in some other way.

Furthermore, Mr. President, our committee has found a deliberate course of action on the part of great munition companies to prevent any effective action on the part of our Government looking toward international disarmament. We have all been familiar with the efforts of a group of shipbuilding companies, acting through the agency of a marplot by the name of Shearer, in sabotaging a conference on naval reduction a few years ago.

But in addition to these activities, which had previously been disclosed, our committee has discovered repeated instances of the efforts of American munition manufacturers to destroy efforts toward international accord on the subject of armament. We have read letters from executives of American munition firms to their European associates and partners describing as " pernicious " all efforts to bring about an agreement of that kind. We have been apprised of the fact that munition manufacturers in this country had been informed weeks in advance of the appointment of the American Commission to the Geneva Conference of 1925, of the personnel of the Commission, and we also learned the fact that the munition makers have been permitted to contact and consult officials or these delegates weeks before their appointment had been made or before any announcement of the personnel had been given to the public. We learned that under the pretense of keeping down action adverse to American sporting weapons and powders a conference called by the Secretary of Commerce sent forward a recommendation that the American delegates to the Geneva Conference insist upon the elimination of pistols and revolvers as military weapons—and this despite the fact that all informed military men know that pistols are part of the prescribed equipment of every cavalryman, every artilleryman, every machine gunner, every tank man, every officer, and nearly every noncommissioned officer in every army in the world. Yet the United States Department of Commerce lent its weight to such recommendation and put the representatives of the munitions industry in contact with the American delegates to the disarmament conference before they had been even appointed.

It is certainly not too much to say, Mr. President, that our committee has already disclosed facts which prove that every effort looking toward American participation in disarmament has been consistently opposed by organized propaganda in behalf of the munitions industry. The further investigation of this subject I believe to be absolutely necessary to the carrying out of the mandate of the Senate to its committee.

I would not wish and could not hope to review in detail all the proper subjects for investigation which have already been opened up and to some extent examined by our committee. My personal opinion is that such an investigation might go on nearly indefinitely, with great benefit to our people and to the peoples of the world. But suffice it for my present purpose to say that it is my opinion and that of our committee that we should be able—although we do not promise—that the present scope of our investigation may be completed within a budget of $100,000. In comparison with some of the estimates for military and naval purposes, I hold this demand to be exceedingly small. And since this is the only known appropriation by the Government in the interest of peace, it certainly seems that the Budget cannot possibly be overbalanced on the side of the prevention of war.

Mr. President, I should be derelict in my duty as a member of your committee if I should close without mention of the plans on the part of the War Department which your committee has uncovered and exposed. These are plans represented by actual proposals for statutes, which have already been prepared and are in the files of the War Department. They have purposely not been sent to the Congress for consideration, because by their own admission, careful consideration by Congress might defeat their adoption. It is the admitted and announced purpose of the War Plans Division, which has been officially approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to hold this proposed legislation until a state of war shall have been declared. And then, of course, Mr. President, as all of us who have had experience in legislative matters are well aware and as the officials of the War and Navy Departments who concocted the plans are well aware, when war actually existed they could send their measures to Congress and any attempt to examine or amend them would be trodden under foot in the hysteria which accompanies war.

Any disposition on the part of any Senator or Representative in Congress to examine the measures or to amend them, debate, or consider them would be howled down as disloyal action in front of the enemy and a disposition to paralyze the effective armament of the Government in time of war. As a matter of fact, the chief of the War Planning Division, in response to a direct question from me, admitted that this was the fact and the theory of withholding these recommendations from Congress until after the declaration of war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Missouri, in view of this very important and remarkable statement, which undoubtedly must have been sustained by some evidence, was there proof before the committee that the officers of the War Department had made the basis of their action a declaration of war by our Government against some other government or some other government's declaration of war against our Government? Does the Senator intend to leave that conclusion as a fact or as a presumption drawn from certain testimony presented from assumption of certain witnesses?

Mr. CLARK. I possibly did not make myself clear to the Senator. These measures have been prepared jointly in the War Planning Division of the Army and Navy. They have been printed and published in an official public document in the War and Navy Departments, a document the supply of which unfortunately was exhausted within 24 hours after its publication, but of which the committee was able to obtain copies. It is stated in that document that these measures, which have been drawn and which it is contemplated will be enacted immediately after a declaration of war with any country, are to be kept in the files and sent to Congress for consideration, not when they might be considered coolly and calmly in time of peace as prospective war measures, but in the hysteria which inevitably accompanies a declaration of war.

Mr. LEWIS. May I add that if these statements are borne out by the facts, it is a very amazing situation?

Mr. CLARK. I can say further to the Senator from Illinois that it is my intention—and I so announced to the committee—to introduce the measures making up this program on my own responsibility as a Senator, not because I favor them necessarily in any case, certainly not in all cases, but because I think they should be introduced at this time and referred to the appropriate committees for calm and deliberate consideration before any declaration of war.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was any expert opinion expressed before your committee justifying offsetting Mr. du Pont's income of a good many million dollars by reported losses on the stock exchange, as suggested by the able Senator from Missouri a few moments ago?

Mr. CLARK. I have not been able to make any technical examination of that matter, I will say to the Senator, but I understood from the Department's report that Mr. du Pont's return was entirely legal and that there was no suggestion whatever of any impropriety or any fraud on his part. I think the Senator from North Dakota will bear me out in that.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I add it is well that we should understand the position taken by the Senator? Is it a correct statement that the profits, whatever they were, have been offset by the losses of speculation on the part of the owner of the profits through his undertakings on the stock market?

Mr. CLARK. I am not familiar with the details of the return. Our investigators reported, however, that the returns for several years were in proper form, and that the Department had approved them. I understand there was no suggestion whatever of any illegality or fraud. I simply mentioned the matter for the purpose of illustrating that the theory so often advanced of permitting huge profits to accumulate in the hands of munition makers and then to recapture them by heavy income taxes frequently proves erroneous.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Illinois be good enough to advise the Senate in what year or years his claim of offsetting losses was made by Mr. du Pont?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, who may more definitely answer the question.

Mr. CLARK. I have forgotten the exact years. I will be glad to find them and put them in the RECORD for the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is it known whether such an offsetting claim could be advanced under the income-tax laws as now amended?

Mr. CLARK. As I say, I am not familiar with the details of the returns, for the reason that the point with which our committee was concerned was the ultimate fact that with this large income no income was recaptured by the Government in the shape of income taxes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. As to the current year, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, the taxpayer could make a claim for losses only as against like gains, and to the extent of $2,000 only.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thank the Senator; and will say, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, that the statement of the Senator from Missouri was of a nature calculated to shock Members of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. I will say that the circumstances shocked me.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MURPHY. I will state that the point the Senator from Missouri seeks to have emphasized is that, while Mr. du Pont had a profit of $28,000,000 arising from the manufacture of war munitions, no part of that profit was subject to tax because he became the beneficiary of deductions for losses, and that, in his view, a more effective means of reaching the profits is not through the income tax, but with prohibition at the source.

Mr. CLARK. That is precisely my point.

Mr. LEWIS. Therefore, we may gather that whatever transpired appears to have been wholly within the law and in compliance with our present enacted statute.

Mr. CLARK. In accordance with the law as it was in effect at that time, I will say to the Senator. I am not informed as to what is the effect under the present law.

Mr. LEWIS. Is the Senator aware whether there has been any change to meet a situation such as he describes?

Mr. CLARK. No; we made no examination of that point because in the committee our interest was simply in the fact that this tremendous profit received largely from the munitions business had not been recaptured by the Government through income taxes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator, with his permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I am not sure that I understood the statement of the Senator from Iowa, but if I did understand it correctly, under the existing law that practice would not be permitted. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator is correct, according to my understanding.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, our committee up to date has made only cursory investigation of the specific provisions of the measures, but we have certainly been able to develop some of the reasons for the desire on the part of the War Department to withhold their submission until after a declaration of war, when they can be put through under whip and spur as measures of immediate national defense.

We have discovered that at least there lurks in the proposed measures the authority for an absolute press censorship. We have also found that there is existent a plan for the abrogation of section (a) of the National Recovery Act and for the absolute draft of labor. We have read the proposal for the draft of the Nation's young men as cannon fodder. At the same time we have been advised from most responsible sources that industry can only be induced to do its best in a war by cajolery and kind words; and this despite the fact that during peace time the very industries which would be our principal defenders in time of war have been exactly the industries which, during the last year and a half, have most stoutly resisted the imposition of any codes of fair competition.

I have already announced, and I intend to carry through, an intention to introduce in this body the measures intended to be shoved through in the event of war, with the least possible consideration. My introduction of those measures will connote not the slightest approval or support of them. I will introduce them simply because I believe it better for the Congress and the people to have the measures before them for consideration at leisure in peace time than to have them crammed down their throats without consideration after a declaration of war. Is it not better calmly to consider the possibility of an absolute press censorship and a draft of all labor now before any war is in prospect for us than to find those authorizations emerge as jokers in unconsidered bills passed in the first hysteria of war?

Mr. President, I have gone into what must necessarily be merely details of the progress of our investigations up to date, yet these random details must certainly show the importance of the investigation as a whole. We, at least, have not scrupled to lay bare without fear or favor the skeletons in our own closet, and in that regard our efforts have had reverberations throughout the world. In Great Britain a resolution for a similar investigation was defeated with contumely and scorn. Yet, so strong was the popular support of the movement, within the same fortnight a real investigation was promised, with appropriate apologies by the same ministerial spokesman who had first been loudest in decrying it.

In France, only week before last, the adoption of a heavily swollen military budget was bitterly resisted in a savage debate in which former Air Minister Cot led the onslaught for an investigation similar to ours as a substitute for the huge increase in appropriation for the military which had been requested by the ministry.

These indications in foreign lands lead us to believe that our labors have not been without response and that important results may follow.

I have said already that it is the unanimous opinion of our committee that we have by no means completed the consideration of the subjects heretofore assigned to us by the Senate. I do not desire at this time to discuss the subjects which remain for investigation, further than casually to mention some of them.

We have not yet touched the subject of the financing of war. Yet all men know that that question involves one of the greatest incentives to war.

We have reason to believe that the millions of profits made by a few banking firms were major influences in taking the United States into war and incurring the huge debts under which we are still staggering. Until we have investigated the banking interests behind the American munition interests we cannot be said to have fulfilled our mandate from this body.

We have also yet to investigate the matter of shipbuilding and steel manufacture. Particularly, I may say, I think there should be some investigation of the reason for the fact that unit-cruiser costs for the United States Navy were $8,000,000 in December 1932, $12,000,000 in August 1933, and $16,000,000 in August 1934, without any appreciable increase in either labor or material costs. I believe that any adequate inquiry into this subject would, many times over, amount to a saving of the entire expense of our investigation.

Mr. President, I do not desire to make further analysis in detail of the evidence which has been produced before our committee. We have already uncovered facts of the most far-reaching importance, so far as the determination of our own national policies is concerned.

This is important in itself. But if, as now appears most probable, the demands of liberals in other countries, based on our investigations, should lead to similar disclosures in other lands, there are likely to be developments in the prevention of war which will ring around the world.

Mr. President, our committee has still much to do. We have focused public attention throughout the world on a great problem. Already we have been the recipients of a barrage of abuse from the munition makers and their sympathizers, from some sections of the press, and from some public officials.

We have been advised publicly and privately that our policy of placing openly and frankly in the record any pertinent evidence which comes to us from any source is likely to injure the business abroad of American munition makers. We have been told, moreover, that the placing in the record of the transactions of our munition makers with foreign officials is likely to injure our prestige abroad. It has been suggested that the general effect of the whole of our investigation may be to injure our foreign trade and that, therefore, we should desist.

To no such doctrines do I subscribe. Rather do I conceive this subject of the prevention of war to be of such importance that I say, with Bruce Barton: "Let's advertise this hell."

Only so can we arrive at the causes of war. Therefore I speak today in behalf of the continuance of the investigation to its logical conclusion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat may I ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; I shall be glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to ask the Senator, with his knowledge and preliminary information respecting disclosures which yet remain to be made, whether he is not in a position to assert that if the inquiry were now abandoned, it would stifle utterly vital information to which the American people are entitled?

Mr. CLARK. I do not think there can be any question whatever as to the entire correctness of the Senator's statement.

Mr. POPE obtained the floor.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. POPE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NYE. In view of the very excellent presentation by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] of the findings thus far of the Munitions Investigating Committee and in the light of what I know is going to come during the balance of the afternoon from the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], I do not know what may be left to say upon the subject. In any event, I desire to give notice at this time of my intent to ask to be heard on this subject upon the convening of the Senate on Monday of next week.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, as a member of the Special Committee of the United States Senate to Investigate the Munitions Industry, it seems appropriate that I submit some observations on the work of the committee and some conclusions as to what has been shown.

On May 6, 1915, a German U-boat of American patent and design torpedoed and sank the Lusitania, drowning 114 American citizens. The Germans claimed that the ship contained a large supply of American-made ammunition for the Allies. This tragedy aroused the indignation of the American people, and was one of the main events that led the United States into the World War.

The people did not then know that the German submarine which was destroying American lives and property was an American invention, designed by American genius, and licensed to German armament makers by an American company for substantial profits.

Neither did the people realize that in the demands of exporters for protection of their legal right to sell and ship their products to the warring nations, the arms makers were playing a most important part in shaping a policy of our Government that was leading the country inevitably into the war.

The people generally thought only of the fact that Germany was immediately responsible for the destruction of American lives and property; that such acts were an invasion of our legal rights, an outrage on American citizens, and a just cause for war. Our passions were aroused, and we entered the war.

Without any doubt whatever the German policy of submarine attacks upon merchant ships was the direct cause of American participation in the war.

Thus appeared one of the tragic paradoxes of the munitions business which developed from the committee hearings—the destruction of American lives and property by submarines of American invention, placed in the hands of a potential enemy by an American firm which asserts high motives of peace and patriotism.

Other paradoxes, as bewildering as they are dangerous to the peace and safety of our country, appeared during the investigation. They will be mentioned later in this discussion.

The evils attending the manufacture and sale by private enterprise of munitions of war are not of recent origin. They were recognized by the statesmen at the Versailles Peace Conference. These evils were of such a nature as to be a menace to the future peace of the world. So impressed were the delegates with the gravity of this matter that they adopted the following provision in section 8 of the League of Nations Covenant:

> The members of the League agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions of war is open to grave objections. The council shall advise how the evil effects attending such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of those members of the League which are not able to manufacture the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

Their deep concern continued; and within 2 months after the close of the Peace Conference, representatives of 28 nations met at St. Germain-en-Laye to formulate a treaty to control the trade in arms and munitions. The United States was represented by Frank L. Polk, Henry White, and Gen. Tasker H. Bliss. A convention was agreed upon, and the representatives of the 28 countries signed it. Most of the nations represented at the Conference ratified the convention, but it was never ratified by the United States.

Here begins the sorry role played by the United States in blocking the efforts of the nations to control the arms traffic. On numerous occasions other nations and the League of Nations urged the United States to ratify the treaty, pointing out that so long as one great arms-manufacturing nation failed to cooperate, the traffic could not be controlled. Still nothing was done by the United States, which had the effect of blocking the treaty.

On April 12, 1923, the League of Nations Council adopted a resolution requesting the United States to—> state its views as to the manner in which it would be willing to cooperate with other nations in the control both of the traffic in arms and the private manufacture of arms * * *."

In response to this resolution the United States wrote a very discouraging reply, giving no indication of a desire to cooperate with the other nations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state the date of that resolution, and the reply, if he can do so?

Mr. POPE. Yes. The resolution was dated April 12, 1923. The date of the reply was within a few weeks after that. However, on December 14, 1923, our country must have undergone some change of heart, for she accepted an invitation to participate in another conference to be held at Geneva, Switzerland, to deal with the private traffic in arms. In 1925 such a conference was held, with former Senator Theodore H. Burton as chairman of the American delegation.

The story of this effort is a sad one. After weeks of conference a convention was agreed upon and was signed by all the delegates, including the Americans. It was presented to the Senate of the United States and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations on January 11, 1926. There it remained, without action, until June 1934. On May 18, 1934, President Roosevelt sent a message to the Senate requesting that the 1925 arms treaty be acted upon. On June 15, the Foreign Relations Committee having acted upon it favorably, it was ratified by unanimous action of the Senate, with reservations that certain other nations approve it. The treaty is, therefore, not effective, and will not be until the conditions are met.

During the present investigation by the special committee, it appeared from the evidence that before the 1925 conference took place, an international union of gunmakers—the Union of Gunmakers of Liege—communicated with certain American armament firms advising them of the forthcoming conference, and suggesting that they formulate a plan to prevent effective restriction on the trade in arms, and suggesting that they contact the United States Government officials. It further appears that Secretary Hoover, of the Department of Commerce, called a conference of various armament firms to consider what action should be taken.

The evidence showed that the arms makers were in close touch with the United States delegation at Geneva, and possessed information as to who would be named as delegates several days before the appointments were announced. Letters introduced at the hearing before the committee indicated that the arms firms were satisfied, before the delegation was selected, that the international proposals for restrictions on the traffic would be defeated, and that their business would be safe for this generation. The original proposals for control of the traffic were seriously weakened and the armament firms were satisfied.

Even then the treaty remained in the Senate without action until the spring of 1934, as before stated.

In 1921, long before the Geneva Conference above referred to was held, a League of Nations committee, after some careful investigation, set forth the objections generally raised against private manufacture of armaments. The committee reported that armament firms have organized international armament rings, have disseminated false reports about military and naval programs of different countries, have tried to bribe government officials, have fomented war scares, and have sought to influence public opinion through the control of newspapers.

In his message of May 18, 1934, President Roosevelt used strong language concerning the menace of the uncontrolled activities of the manufacturers and merchants of engines of destruction. He said:

> The private and uncontrolled manufacture of arms and munitions and the traffic therein has become a serious source of discord and strife. * * * The peoples of many countries are being taxed to the point of poverty and starvation in order to enable governments to engage in a mad race in armament, which, if permitted to continue, may well result in war. This grave menace to the peace of the world is due in no small measure to the uncontrolled activities of the manufacturers and merchants of engines of destruction, and it must be met by the concerted action of the peoples of all nations.

The record of our Government in failing to cooperate with other nations of the world to control the traffic in arms for all the years following the war, until last year, is not one of which we may be proud. The activities of munition makers during that period, as disclosed by the evidence before the committee, has stirred the peoples of the world. Public interest has been intense and wide-spread, not only in this country but in other countries as well. I know of no investigation in recent years that has made so large an appeal.

Expressions of interest and approval have come from thousands of individuals and from all kinds of organizations. Resolutions of business clubs, churches, schools, bar associations, farm organizations, and other groups, have been received by members of the committee. I happen to know that resolutions are being prepared for action by several State legislatures during the coming winter. The demand for a complete and thorough investigation is almost universal.

The people of other countries are becoming active in demanding investigations. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said, recently Premier Ramsay MacDonald announced that England would appoint a royal commission to investigate the arms industry in England, and a strong demand has arisen in France for a similar inquiry. I am advised that movements are under way in some of the South American countries to hold such investigations.

The United States deserves great credit for the leadership that has been manifested by the investigation of a subject of such great importance to the peace of the world.

The committee, under Senate Resolution 206, was instructed specifically to investigate the nature of the organizations engaged in the manufacture or trade in arms, the methods used in promoting such trade, and legislation and treaties for the regulation and control of the traffic, to review the findings of the War Policies Commission, to inquire into the advisability of creating a Government monopoly for the manufacture of arms and munitions, and to submit recommendations for legislation.

A partial investigation has been made. The evidence so far submitted warrants, in my opinion, the following findings, among others:

First. Bribery is generally accepted as a necessary element in the promotion of foreign armament sales.

Second. Arms-manufacturing companies of the various nations are linked together under patent and sales agreements which provide for exchange of secret processes, division of profits, and division of sales territories.

Third. Armament firms working in competition or in association with other companies have stimulated armament races between friendly countries.

Fourth. Agencies of the United States Government have encouraged the promotion of foreign armament sales. The United States War and Navy Departments have released military designs to private armament firms and have served as sales-promotion agents in foreign markets.

Fifth. Armament firms have sold to both sides in time of war and have sold arms to revolutionary and government factions in civil war.

Sixth. Armament firms, in cooperation with Army and Navy officials, have supported large Army and Navy appropriations and have opposed embargoes and other restrictions on arms. They oppose international processes and organizations for the pacific settlement of disputes between nations.

Seventh. Armament firms have sold arms and implements of war to Germany, enabling that nation to rearm in violation of the Versailles Treaty.

Eighth. Armament firms made huge profits during the World War.

BRIBERY A COMMON PRACTICE

Throughout the evidence like a thread runs the fact that bribery is regarded by arms salesmen as an essential element in the sale of war material abroad. Scores of letters to this effect from arms salesmen in many parts of the world were received in evidence. Mr. L. Y. Spear, vice president of the Electric Boat Co., in a letter to Vickers, said:

> The real foundation of all South American business is graft.

(Exhibit 68.)

Sir Basil Zaharoff, in one of his letters to an American firm, referred to this practice as "doing the needful." The Soley Armament Co., a British firm, informed A. J. Mirandy, of the American Armament Co., that "we fully understand that armament deals are not usually done without officials getting greased." (Exhibit 29.)

It appeared that in 1932 the Du Pont Co. paid a large fee to a son of the then President of the Argentine, apparently in connection with a scheme to prevent the construction of a Government powder factory in Argentina (pp. 1173–1193). Curtiss-Wright officials in Bolivia reported that the controller general of Bolivia, Lopez, was understood to be a "silent partner" in the firm of Webster & Ashton, agents for Curtiss and other American armament firms. (Exhibits 300–301.) The Electric Boat Co. in 1929 offered a commission of $20,000 to Juan Leguia, son of the late President Leguia of Peru, on each of two submarines to be built for the Peruvian Navy. (Exhibit 41.) Over a period of 11 years, from 1919 to 1930, the Electric Boat Co. paid special commissions totaling $766,000 to Sir Basil Zaharoff, the supermunitions salesman and mystery man of Europe.

These are but a few of the numerous instances of graft, bribery, and special commissions that were brought to the attention of the committee. They merely illustrate the statement of Mr. Spear that the business of armament firms in foreign sales is based largely upon bribery and graft.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS OF ARMS INDUSTRIES

The evidence showed that many large armament firms of various nations are closely associated in the sale of their products throughout the world; that they divide profits, allocate territory, protect each other's interests, and act in concert against outside competition. The evidence further shows that firms in all the principal arms-producing countries operate under license agreements providing for the exchange of patents and secret processes.

The principal agreements revealed by the committee were those between Electric Boat and Vickers, Ltd., of England; between Electric Boat Co. and Whitehead & Co., of Hungary; between Electric Boat and La Sociedad Espanola de Construcion Naval, of Spain; between Electric Boat and Cockerill, of Belgium; De Schelde, of Holland; Cantieri Navali Della Spezia, of Italy; and Mitsubishi, of Japan; between E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co. and Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., of England; between Du Pont and Dynamite Aktiengesellschaft and Koln-Rottweiler, of Germany; and between Du Pont and Mitsui, of Japan. It appeared that Electric Boat Co. had such an arrangement with an armament firm in Germany before the World War, under which the use of patents in manufacturing submarines was permitted. After the outbreak of war Germany, of course, continued the manufacture of submarines, sometimes called "U-boats", without paying royalties to the American firm. Reference has been made to the sinking of the Lusitania and other American ships by submarines of American patent and design.

Another illustration of how these agreements operate is found in testimony given by Mr. Henry R. Carse, president of the Electric Boat Co., on September 5, 1934. During the Tacna-Arica dispute the firm of Vickers was selling its submarines to Chile while the Electric Boat Co. was selling to Peru. The closest sort of secret cooperation between the two companies was shown. On September 24, 1928, Mr. C. W. Craven, a representative of Vickers, wrote to Mr. Spear, vice president of the Electric Boat, stating:

> I am trying to ginger up the Chileans to take three more boats, and I want to ask if you will accept the same royalty as you did last time. You will remember that this was 10,000 per boat.

The president of the American firm stated that it was their practice to "split the difference."

In a letter from Commander Craven to Mr. Carse, he said:

> Even today we are bound to secrecy, so will you please promise me not to let your little friends from the other South American country know what is going on at present.

So there was an American salesman of Electric Boat in Peru and a British salesman of Vickers in Chile selling submarines. The evidence showed they apparently engaged in the keenest sort of competition and then divided the profits.

When the State Department of the United States, after a long period of negotiation, finally succeeded in bringing about a resumption of diplomatic relations between Peru and Chile, Mr. Carse wrote as follows:

> It is too bad that the pernicious activities of our State Department have put the brake on armament orders from Peru by forcing the resumption of formal diplomatic relations with Chile. My friends advise me that this gesture means that all contemplated orders must go over until next year.

STIMULATING ARMS RACES BETWEEN FRIENDLY COUNTRIES

This leads us to a discussion of the acts of armament firms in stimulating races between friendly countries in preparing for war. Sometimes such firms were in actual competition and at other times they were in association under agreements such as I have referred to.

It appeared from the evidence that the Electric Boat Co. was engaged in a campaign to sell submarines to Brazil and Argentina. Brazil adopted a huge naval program in 1933, largely as the result of activities of armament firms in that territory. Argentina was loath to embark on a naval program unless, as stated by Commander Aubrey, compelled to to do so by the building program of Brazil. Writing in 1924, Aubrey told his employer, the Electric Boat Co., that "in this business we will have to be tactful and a little diplomatic", as negotiations in Brazil and Argentina were coming to a head at the same time.

Many other cases of arms competition were brought out by the evidence. Curtiss-Wright sold 54 planes to China from January 1932 to April 1934. From January 1, 1934, to August 31, 1934, United Aircraft sold 41 military planes and other air equipment to China at a total cost of over $1,000,000.

As a result of these armament sales to China, Japanese newspapers launched an attack on American policy in China, while the Japanese Government increased appropriations for military air forces to meet the menace of foreign building. At the same time American firms were exporting to Japan raw materials to be used in the manufacture of munitions and military equipment. The sales of scrap iron and steel to Japan increased from 208,000 tons in 1929 to 547,000 tons in 1933, an increase of 163 percent.

I venture to say that no fair-minded person can read the record of the hearings of this committee without being forced to the conclusion that the frequent disputes and wars between South American States are largely a result of the activities of armament salesmen in that territory.

GOVERNMENT AID TO ARMS SALES

The evidence further discloses that governments aid and encourage sales to foreign customers, and even permit private firms to use the latest designs, inventions, and specifications for that purpose. This is done on the principle that a strong domestic armament industry is vital to national defense. It appears that this has been done in numerous instances where it might prove detrimental to the national defense. Not only has encouragement been given by governmental agencies but officials of the Government have even acted as sales agents for armament firms.

A memorandum, dated August 5, 1933, released by the War and Navy Departments and circulated by the Bureau of Aeronautics, states that "the War and Navy Departments will encourage the American aeronautical industry in developing foreign business and assist in such development so far as consistent with national policy and the needs of the national defense."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the evidence justify a like conclusion to that recently stated by the able Senator with respect to the activities of munitions makers in other parts of the world serving as a cause of war?

Mr. POPE. So far as evidence has been received, it appears the same practices prevail in other parts of the world. As a matter of fact, in the South American field, which is a rather open field for the munition makers, the foreign firms pursue exactly the same practice.

Testimony of aviation company officials indicated that recent designs on aircraft are released if sufficiently large orders are received from abroad. An April 1934 Curtiss-Wright informed the Peruvian Government that it would be able to furnish Peru with the—> most modern fighting unit of its type ever developed—a type furnished only to the United States Army Air Corps. * * * Provided that we have a contract for at least 10 planes, we will be able to secure permission from the United States Government to build for Peru.

On September 17, 1932, the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department approved a request from the United Aircraft Corporation to transfer to the Brazilian Government 29 airplanes then under construction for the United States Navy. (Exhibit 507.)

The evidence shows that American aviation companies are supplying foreign governments with airplanes of substantially the type used by the United States Army and Navy. Not only that, it appears that some American companies may have supplied military secrets in order to secure foreign orders. (Exhibits 448, 449.)

Another method of assisting the armament firms appears in the case of the Navy Department permitting the United States cruiser Raleigh to exhibit to Turkish Government officials the three antiaircraft guns on the vessel. This took place on March 28, 1929, in the harbor of Constantinople. (Exhibit 228.)

The evidence reveals the fact that a fleet of submarines was sent to South America for the purpose of assisting in the sale of submarines by the Electric Boat Co. This occurred in 1920. In that connection Admiral Niblack, Chief of Naval Intelligence, gave directions "to agitate this subject and see if it cannot be consummated."

Another method of assisting armament firms in making sales is sending Army or Navy missions or lending Army or Navy officials to foreign governments to advise them on their defense programs.

Two United States naval officers, attached to a mission, visited the Groton plant of the Electric Boat Co. before they left for Peru "to practically take charge of the Peruvian Navy." (Exhibit 59.) The mission, which remained in Peru for nearly 10 years, drew up an elaborate naval program providing for the purchase of warships and submarines in the United States. The agent of the Electric Boat Co. asserted that Admiral Woodward, head of the mission in 1924, "had been of great help altogether in securing contracts." (Exhibit 67.) The mission allowed the company to name an American officer to pass on submarine specifications.

A striking instance of the assistance of a Government official appears in the case of Lt. Comdr. James H. Strong. While Strong was in the employ of the United States Government and during the Leticia controversy between Peru and Colombia he was permitted to advise the Colombian Government on plans for defense against Peru. He prepared such plans in the office of the Driggs Ordnance & Engineering Co. In the plans he recommended the guns of that company. On the same day a letter from the Driggs Ordnance Co. to the Colombian Government gave lists and prices of the arms recommended by Lieutenant Commander Strong.

The plans prepared by Strong were for the defense of Atlantic and Pacific ports of Colombia against possible naval attack by Peru with submarines which had been recommended by the earlier American mission in Peru. It appeared that Lieutenant Commander Strong was receiving compensation from three different sources. The United States Government was paying his regular salary, the Colombian Government was paying him for his services as technical adviser, and the Driggs Ordnance & Engineering Co. was providing him compensation by carrying an account for him with the New York Stock Exchange and paying Strong the profits.

In this connection I read an excerpt from a letter by Lt. Comdr. James H. Strong written while in the regular service of the United States Navy and employed as technical adviser to the Colombian Government, to Mr. Ignacius Miranda, an official of the Driggs Ordnance & Engineering Co. The excerpt reads as follows (written in ink):

> UNITED STATES NAVY YARD, PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
> NAVAL AIRCRAFT FACTORY, CHERRY COTTAGE, > Box 85, Leni, Pa., August 14, 1933.
> DEAR IGGY: Many thanks for your note regarding the sale of New York Ship. I agree with you in taking a little profit and then grabbing the stuff back again in the reaction of another little gain.
> Two paragraphs omitted—
> Sincerely yours,
> JIMMY STRONG.

While all this was going on, the State Department, in cooperation with the League of Nations, was using its good offices to bring about a pacific settlement of the Leticia controversy between Colombia and Peru.

Another way of assisting private firms is the practice of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Department of Commerce in sending military pilots to organize training schools for foreign governments. This was done in 1931 by sending such pilots to the Nanking Government in China. (Exhibit 551).

In January 1933, officials of the United Aircraft Co. wrote:

> While it is believed that all of these men are entirely familiar with Boeing Corsair equipment, it might be advisable for the Boeing organization in Seattle to take them through the plant before they sail.

The method by which salesmen for the arms manufacturing concerns induce governments to assist them is well illustrated by a letter written by Sir Basil Zaharoff, to the Electric Boat Co. on November 3, 1925. Sir Basil said:

* * * The American Ambassador in Spain is a very clever gentleman and I think you should arrange for instructions to be sent him from your State Department for him to tell the Spaniards that the United States Government worked very harmoniously with the Electric Boat Co. * * * The English Government will be difficult to move in the same direction, but when you inform me that your government has given the necessary instructions to their Ambassador in Madrid, I will have no difficulty in persuading the British to do ditto, ditto, ditto.

(Exhibit 32.)

It will be recalled that Sir Basil Zaharoff is the gentleman who is now in retirement in his chateau at Balincourt near Paris, protected by a strong gate and high walls around the chateau; guarded by Hindu bodyguards and a brace of dogs. He is enjoying the Grand Cross of the Order of the British Empire conferred by King George, the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor of France, and the Grand Cross of the Order of the Savior of Greece. Of him it has been said that the gravestones of a million men shall be his monument—their dying groans his epitaph.

The evidence before our committee showed he received nearly a million dollars in special commissions on United States armament sales, on which he tried to evade the payment of an income tax. He has visited the United States and paid his respects to the President.

Assistance by Government officials is not always limited to promoting sales of war materials manufactured in this country, where the matter of plant capacity and national defense might be involved. Such assistance is sought for foreign manufacturers who have working agreements with American concerns. In 1933 Electric Boat Co. requested the State Department to intercede in behalf of an Italian company, a licensee of Electric Boat Co. in competition with other Italian companies for a contract from the Italian Government. The State Department replied that the American Ambassador in Italy had been "authorized to lend your representative such appropriate assistance as he may consider warranted under the circumstances."

It is only fair to say, however, that in a letter of June 30, 1933, written by Under Secretary of State Mr. William Phillips, this policy was apparently reversed. Mr. Phillips said the Department of State could not appropriately take such action.

The close relationship existing between certain Government Army and Navy officials and the private arms industry, as disclosed by the evidence, has been a matter of constant surprise to the members of the investigating committee. Secret data has been furnished by the Government to some of the large armament firms by the War Department, which such Department does not desire to have disclosed to the Senate investigating committee, another arm of the Government.

In a letter dated August 8, 1934, Gen. Douglas MacArthur called the attention of the Du Pont Co. to "the necessity of safeguarding these secret data from being made public by the Senate committee."

It appeared from the evidence that the Du Pont Co., on its own authority, placed a stamp upon its correspondence which it did not wish to be made public, and represented that it was acting under the instructions of the War and Navy Departments. Members of the committee pointed out that neither the company nor the War Department had the authority to disregard the process of the United States Senate.

In this connection, about the time of the transfer of control of the Remington Arms Co. to the Du Pont Co. in 1933, a staff meeting of the Remington Co. was held at which a report was made by Mr. E. C. Hadley, of the Remington Co. I read from the minutes of the meeting:

Mr. Hadley stated that Major Casey (prominent Du Pont official), at Wilmington, had informed the United States Ordnance Department that it was our wish that they would consider the Remington Co. in the same light as they consider the Du Pont Co.—that is, almost a subdivision of their own department.

Du Pont Co.—almost a subdivision of the Ordnance Department of the United States Government!

I must say this is exactly the idea one gets from the documentary evidence submitted to the committee.

As a logical growth of this idea I will now read the views of the Du Pont Co. as to the duty of Congress and as to ownership of this country as expressed by Maj. K. K. V. Casey, head of the smokeless powder department of the Du Pont Co., in a memorandum dated July 27, 1933, found in the files of that company. In the fifth paragraph of the memorandum Major Casey says:

Congress is too short-sighted to see the necessity of appropriating funds to keep manufacturers of military materials in business. The Army and Navy would spend money if they could get it, and because they cannot get it are doing all they possibly can do, and that is to help us make sales to other nations. This is our country and not the country of Congress.

This memorandum speaks for itself. Comment is unnecessary. If the members of this body and the people of the country are astounded at this claim by the Du Pont Co., the members of the committee are less so because day after day evidence of the enormous power and influence of the munitions makers was received. That statement of Major Casey is not an idle boast. It is an impatient expression of the arrogant attitude of the company—an attitude of contempt for Congress and for the people throughout the country, in mines, marts, fields, and factories, who must furnish the men to fight and die in the next war to make the world safe for the Du Ponts.

We tender this claim of ownership of the country by the Du Pont Co. to the Congress and the country for their consideration.

SELLING TO BOTH SIDES IN WAR

It was a common practice of arms manufacturing concerns to sell to both sides during war. During the Leticia dispute between Colombia and Peru, Du Pont sold 88,000 pounds of TNT to the Peruvian Government and, at the same time, sold 340,000 pounds to the Atlas Powder Co. for shipment to the Colombian Government.

It is just as common for these firms to sell to both factions in civil conflicts. Before the overthrow of President Machado of Cuba on August 13, 1933, Federal Laboratories of Pittsburgh had been selling tear gas and other military equipment to the Cuban Government—that is, the regular government under Machado. (Exhibits 602–604.)

On August 18, 1933, President Young of Federal Laboratories wrote a letter to revolutionary Mendieta expressing "our congratulations to you and your associates on the marvelous outcome in Cuba." On September 4, after the overthrow of Mendieta, Federal Laboratories promptly entered into negotiations to sell equipment to both factions. President Young offered a Cuban agent, Texidor, "a commission of 10 percent on all business done with the Menocal-Mendieta group and a commission of 10 percent to 20 percent on all business done with the Grau group." I assume that he thought, perhaps, the Grau group might be more difficult to do business with.

It appeared from the evidence that some of the large armament firms were in a position to "alter the political balance of power" of the smaller states of the world. For instance, the Soley Armament Co., Ltd., of England, stated in a letter to an American firm:

The stocks which we control are of such magnitude that the sale of a big block of them could alter the political balance of power of the smaller states involving corresponding complications from the point of view of finance and industry.

SUPPORT BY ARMAMENT MAKERS OF MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS; AND OPPOSITION TO EMBARGOES AND ALL EFFORTS FOR PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES

It appeared repeatedly from the testimony that armament firms were constantly active in their support of large appropriations for the Navy and War Departments of the Government. They were working in close cooperation with Army and Navy officials to influence the committees and Members of Congress to vote for such appropriations. In spite of protests to the contrary, testimony revealed that some of these firms maintained agents whose business it was to entertain Members of Congress and to lobby in behalf of such legislation.

For several years efforts had been made by statesmen of the world to apply embargoes and impose restrictions on the shipment of arms and ammunition. Various measures have been introduced in Congress, notably resolutions offered by Representative HAMILTON FISH and by the late Senator Theodore G. Burton. Letters received in evidence showed in some detail the methods pursued and the results of efforts of representatives of munitions companies and War and Navy officials in bringing about the defeat of this legislation. Mr. F. J. Monahan of the Remington Arms Co. referred to embargoes and similar efforts as "crazy ideas."

On May 18, 1934, Congress adopted a joint resolution to prohibit the sale of arms and ammunition from the United States to Bolivia and Paraguay. On May 28 such sale was forbidden in a proclamation signed by President Roosevelt. Some of the armament firms not only opposed the adoption of measures restricting trade in arms, but have defied the national policy and have circumvented the President's proclamation.

On June 6, 1934, Mr. Lammot du Pont, president of the Du Pont Co., wrote a letter to President Roosevelt assuring him of the willingness of his company to cooperate with the arms embargo measures.

On June 7, the next day, the Du Pont office in Buenos Aires received an inquiry from its agent in Paraguay calling for quotations on 2,000 kilos of TNT, undoubtedly for the Government of Paraguay. The Du Pont agent wrote to the Imperial Chemical Industry explaining that Du Pont "could not quote from this end owing to the embargo on munitions and military propellants decreed by President Roosevelt. In view of the fact that there is no similar embargo in England, we suggest that you quote price to your office in Buenos Aires, who in turn would advise Ferreira (the agent in Paraguay)." (Exhibit 477.)

Under the sales agreement between Du Pont and I. C. I., Du Pont receives a commission on all sales made by I. C. I. in South America.

The evidence further disclosed that the Curtiss-Wright Export Co. instructed its agent to find out whether airplane parts could be shipped to Chile "for assembly and fabrication for such countries as Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and so forth." (Exhibit 364.) The agent replied that there seemed to be no objection to the manufacture of planes in Chile for export to the other South American countries.

Since the World War, the responsible statesmen of most nations of the world have been making an effort to develop machinery for the preservation of peace. Every President of the United States has emphasized the necessity for cooperative effort among the nations to promote peace. Disarmament conferences have been held. Conventions to control traffic in arms have been formulated. The Kellogg-Briand Pact for the outlawry of war has been adopted. Membership in the World Court has been urged by every President since the war.

What has been the attitude of the munition makers toward these efforts? Contempt for the policies of the President and the State Department regarding peaceful settlement of international disputes, and hostility toward efforts for disarmament have been revealed in the correspondence of several of these concerns.

For instance, as before stated, L. Y. Spear, vice president of the Electric Boat Co., wrote to Vickers, its associate in England, in 1928, that "It is too bad the pernicious activities of our State Department have put the brake on armament orders from Peru by forcing the resumption of formal diplomatic relations with Chile."

Again, in a letter written by Sir Charles Craven, of Vickers, in January 1933, he expressed concern lest "Geneva or any other troublesome organization abolish the large submarines."

The irony of the situation appears in a letter written in October 1924, by Commander Aubrey, South American agent for the Electric Boat Co., in which he proposed to secure the appointment as official representative of Peru to the conference on control of arms and munitions, to be held at Geneva in 1925. Wrote Commander Aubrey:

> I feel that I can do something good for Peru and as well as the cause of the submarines in South America. My flag will be "no quotas in submarines" construction in South America and classify it as a "defensive weapon."

Although the Electric Boat Co. had no objection to his appointment, except the expenses, he did not attend the conference.

Of course, the philosophy of all munition makers is that preparedness is the best way to prevent war. Repeatedly the Du Ponts have quoted the advice of Washington to prepare for war in time of peace. Mr. Irénée du Pont further insisted that the best way to fight a war is to establish a monarchy.

It is interesting to observe the fervor with which the munition makers plead for preparedness and national defense. All their activities are justified by them on the ground that they promote preparedness. They believe not only in preparedness for the United States, but preparedness for all the other nations to whom they can sell their arms. In the sale of implements of destruction they are internationalists, but in all efforts for disarmament, for controlling traffic in munitions, for cooperation in the process of peaceful settlement of international disputes, they are intense nationalists.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. As a matter of fact they are just as much in favor of preparedness for prospective enemies of the United States as for the United States itself, are they not?

Mr. POPE. Exactly so.

Mr. CLARK. And correspondence adduced before the committee shows that in many instances acts have been encouraged by Army and Navy officials conducive to that end.

Mr. POPE. Exactly. The position of the munitions manufacturers is that all nations should be prepared; that, of course, we should be prepared to protect our national interests, but that all other nations should be equally well prepared, and that, of course, has the effect for them of affording them a tremendous market for their products.

AIDING GERMANY TO REARM

The story of the activities of arms makers in the rearming of Germany in violation of the Versailles Treaty is another striking illustration of the extent to which they go in their pursuit of profits.

At the Paris Peace Conference at the close of the World War the allied and associated powers took good care to see that Germany and her allies were disarmed. In articles 126, 168, and 170 of the Treaty of Versailles Germany was compelled to destroy her munitions industries. She was forbidden to export or import—I now quote from the treaty—"arms, munitions, and war materials of every kind." She was permitted to manufacture just enough war materials to comply with the treaty. Germany was given assurances by the victorious Allies that this requirement was a preliminary step to general disarmament as expressed in part V of the treaty. Clemenceau, as president of the peace conference, gave further assurance of that purpose in his statement to the German delegation before signing the treaty.

That this promise has not been kept to Germany is one of the tragic post-war developments. The sorry part the United States has played in such efforts as were made by the allied nations to carry out the promise has already been mentioned.

The evidence before our committee has clearly disclosed the fact that Germany has been rearming in violation of the treaties. The part great armament firms of Europe and America have played in this matter is one of the important features of this investigation. I have already pointed out the activities of these concerns in preventing the allied nations from effectively controlling the trade in arms and munitions. Let us now see what they have done to help Germany rearm in violation of the treaties.

The files of the American firms examined by the committee reveal that the peace treaties have been disregarded not only by the German arms industry but by private firms in France, Great Britain, and the United States. The firms in the great arms manufacturing countries have sold airplanes and engines, have engaged in the sale of contraband arms and ammunition, have sold propellants and explosives which are convertible into, or easily used for, military purposes, and have formed interlocking relationships with each other through patent and process agreements.

It was shown that the Curtiss-Wright and United Aircraft groups increased their sales of airplanes and engines enormously through the years of 1933 and 1934. The sales to Germany by United Aircraft increased from $2,000 in 1931 to $1,445,000 in the first 8 months of 1934. This included, in 1933, shipment of 29 engines, and during the first 8 months of 1934, 176 engines, 2 Boeing transports, and 6 planes, described as "mail planes."

Pratt & Whitney, a subsidiary of the United Aircraft Co., in 1933 signed an agreement with the Bavarian Motor Works, giving that German company the authority to build air-cooled engines similar to those in use in the United States Army. Under the original agreement the Bavarian Motor Works paid $200 for each engine manufactured. Later the agreement was modified to avoid the necessity of royalty reports and a flat royalty of $50,000 a year was paid to Pratt & Whitney.

In 1926 the Du Pont Co. entered into a license agreement with the Koln-Rottweiller and Dynamite Aktiengesellschaft, formerly the Alfred Nobel Co., of Germany. Under this agreement an exchange of patents and secret inventions covering all kinds of explosives for so-called "industrial purposes" was provided. The agreement covered smokeless propellants, fuses, igniters, and other devices. It was admitted that these products could be used for military purposes.

Reports from the European sales offices of American firms in 1933 and 1934 showed a tremendous increase in the contraband of arms and ammunition in Germany. (Exhibit 508.)

It further appeared that, as early as April 1924, Col. William N. Taylor, foreign representative of the Du Pont Co., and an unusually capable observer, advised his company of a confidential report made by a number of the war departments of Europe.

The conclusion of this report—is that a German-English group * * * are endeavoring to get the military supplies of Europe into their hands in the hope of making a large profit through future reequipment of the European armies.

Said Colonel Taylor—

The report of Colonel Taylor goes on to state that German, French, and English armament firms were getting together for the purpose of controlling the business. In 1926 Colonel Taylor made a further report to the Du Pont Co. in which he stated that the English firm of Nobel & Co. (now I. C. I. with whom Du Pont Co. is affiliated) was cooperating with Koln-Rottweiller, of Germany, in the manufacture of powder and cartridges, and that materials were being shipped to Holland, assembled and transshipped to Germany. Correspondence obtained from the Du Pont Co. files disclose that it was generally known among arms manufacturers of Europe that the Nobel Co., through its interlocking business connections with German manufacturers, had powerful influence with governments. At any rate, little action was taken by the English or French Government to stop the rearming of Germany in violation of the treaties.

Recently both England and France have announced a policy and have made appropriations for largely increasing their air forces on account of Germany's activity in that field. Also, press reports indicate that responsible officials of the United States Government have been working on a plan to increase combat planes from the present figure of some 800 to about 2,500. Probably the greatest threat of war on a large scale now comes from Germany. Certainly a very heavy responsibility rests upon the private arms makers for this situation which confronts the world today.

PROFITS

It is clear, of course, that the lure of profits is the primary motive of the munition makers. While the record of the hearings are filled with protestations by representatives of the industry of their patriotism, one must conclude that their first consideration is profits. In a letter written by Mr. Monaghan, one of the high officials of the Remington Co. (exhibit 907), referring to a delicate situation in connection with the sale of ammunition to Bolivia and Paraguay, in 1933, he used this significant language:

Very sorry the red-hot situation did not develop into immediate business, but I can imagine your playing both the Bolivian and Paraguan ministers for anything that might materialize. * * * The main object is to get the business. * * *

Following the reading of this letter into the record, Mr. Monaghan was asked:

That is a perfectly correct statement, is it not, that the main object was to get the business?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes, sir.

That the manufacture of munitions is profitable in war time was very clearly shown by the evidence. The total profits of the Du Pont Co. as a result of the World War amounted to $265,871,625.93. The earnings increased from $4,997,000 in 1914 to $86,000,000 in 1915. These profits permitted a large expansion of the industrial holdings of the company after the war. In 1919 the company invested $50,000,000 in the chemical and dye industry, acquiring a controlling interest in some 30 domestic and foreign corporations. The company also acquired 10,000,000 shares of General Motors stock, or about 24 percent of the entire stock issue of that company. In 1933 the Du Pont Co. had 14 wholly owned subsidiary companies, 18 partially owned subsidiaries, and direct investments in other companies. The assets of the Du Pont Co. were increased from $74,000,000 in 1913 to $308,000,000 in 1918 and $351,000,000 in 1927.

The original investment of the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Co. was $1,000, for which 5,000 shares of no-par stock were issued at 20 cents a share. The returns for the year 1932 on the original $1,000 were at least $11,437,250—or 1,143,724 percent.

From the official records of the Bureau of Internal Revenue interesting facts were disclosed as to profits during the war.

The Atlas Powder Co. in 1917 made 27 percent on invested capital.

Colt's Patent Firearms Co. made in 1916, 60 percent; in 1917, 64 percent; and in 1918, 51 percent.

Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co. made in 1917, 43 per cent.

Savage Arms Corporation in 1917, 65 percent, and in 1918, 43 percent.

The Western Cartridge Co. made in 1916, 49 percent; in 1917, 35 percent; and in 1918, 39 percent.

The Winchester Repeating Arms Co. made in 1918, 22 percent.

The Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. made in 1917, 86 percent; in 1918, 72 percent; in 1919, 70 percent; and in 1920, 75 percent.

The Bethlehem Loading Co., a subsidiary of Bethlehem Steel, made in 1918, 362 percent; capital, $41,000; net income, $151,000.

There can be no doubt that the arms and munitions business is a profitable one during war.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I wonder if the Senator will not concur in the statement that many of these stupendous profits were derived from the so-called "cost-plus" contracts with the Government.

Mr. POPE. Oh, yes. It appeared during the hearings that these cost-plus contracts were tremendously profitable contracts for the munition makers.

CONCLUSION

While our investigation of the munitions industry is only partially complete, the evidence discloses many grave abuses, ranging from unscrupulous methods in the promotion of foreign munitions sales to obstructing disarmament efforts. The failure of the great nations to prevent the supplying of arms to Germany in violation of the provisions of the Versailles Treaty, the failure of peace efforts in the Gran Chaco, and the limited effectiveness of arms embargoes, suggest the powerful influence of the munitions industry. The fact that the governments have aided and encouraged these private interests on the assumption that such action is necessary to the national defense in time of war has presented a strange paradox. While the statesmen of the great powers have been constantly declaring the necessity of disarmament, and holding conferences to accomplish it, Government officials and departments have been aiding the armament makers in sales of war materials, and thus arming the nations of the world.

On the one hand we have our officials sitting in disarmament conferences, making statements that disarmament is necessary for the peace of the world. On the other hand we have departments of the same government working closely with the munition makers, helping them to promote foreign sales to arm the nations of the world.

Another strange paradox appears. While the United States is seeking to strengthen its national defense by the invention and use of superior designs, the Army and Navy officials of the United States are releasing such designs to private firms to promote foreign sales. In that way our potential enemies are being constantly given the advantages that are thought to be necessary for our superior national defense.

As a result of all this we find the nations of the world arming in peace time as never before, spending larger sums of money on armaments, imposing heavier burdens upon the taxpayers, and engaging in a race in armaments that is threatening the peace of the world.

Despite all our declarations for peace, despite the earnest desire for peace among the peoples of the world, despite constant efforts for disarmament and for the establishment of processes for the pacific settlement of international disputes, the nations of the world seem to be in the grip of some monster that is driving them on to destruction. The next world war is a matter of common discussion. Preparations for it are feverishly under way in all the world. It appeared that the concern of our own War Department was to be prepared for "the next war." In almost every statement that was made there was an assumption of "the next war", and the probable time when it would occur, and that we must be prepared for it. The prospective legislation mentioned by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was drawn up in order to be prepared for "the next war." That it is inevitable is widely assumed.

It is believed this investigation will in part furnish the answer to the queston as to what is driving the nations on in the course they have been following since the war. It is hoped that appropriate action, both in national legislation and in concerted action among the nations, to remedy the evils of the traffic in arms, will in large measure relieve humanity from the constant menace of war.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I send to the desk certain resolutions which I report back favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ask that they be considered at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is the Senator presenting a request for immediate consideration?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that these are only formal resolutions, authorizing certain committees to conduct hearings and to pay for stenographers, as to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the following resolutions reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate were severally considered and agreed to:

Senate Resolution 4, submitted by Mr. GEORGE on January 4, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 9, submitted by Mr. LOGAN on January 4, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 22, submitted by Mr. GORE on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 23, submitted by Mr. PITTMAN on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 27, submitted by Mr. WAGNER on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 34, submitted by Mr. KING on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 14, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 10, 1935

ENVOYS EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY

The following-named persons for appointment to the offices to which they were appointed during the last recess of the Senate, as follows:

To be Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the United States of America—

TO ECUADOR

Antonio C. Gonzalez, of New York.

TO PANAMA

George T. Summerlin, of Louisiana.

TO URUGUAY

Julius G. Lay, of the District of Columbia.

TO COLOMBIA

William Dawson, of Minnesota.

Meredith Nicholson, of Indiana, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Paraguay, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Venezuela.

PROMOTIONS IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE

The following-named persons for promotion in the Foreign Service of the United States, effective as of July 1, 1934, as follows:

From Foreign Service officer of class 6 to Foreign Service officer of class 5:

Harris N. Cookingham, of New York.
Louis H. Gourley, of Illinois.
Donald R. Heath, of Kansas.
Robertson Honey, of New York.
Winthrop R. Scott, of Ohio.

From Foreign Service officer of class 7 to Foreign Service officer of class 6:

Ellis O. Briggs, of Maine.
Harold M. Collins, of Virginia.
Allan Dawson, of Iowa.
William E. De Courcy, of Texas.
Charles L. DeVault, of Indiana.
Howard Donovan, of Illinois.
Albert M. Doyle, of Michigan.
Richard B. Haven, of Illinois.
Thomas S. Horn, of Missouri.
Clarence E. Macy, of Colorado.
Walter H. McKinney, of Michigan.
Horatio Mooers, of Maine.
John J. Muccio, of Rhode Island.
Christian M. Ravndal, of Iowa.
Thomas H. Robinson, of New Jersey.
E. Talbot Smith, of Connecticut.
Christian T. Steger, of Virginia.
Francis H. Styles, of Virginia.
George P. Waller, of Alabama.

From Foreign Service officer of class 8 to Foreign Service officer of class 7:

William H. Beach, of Virginia.
William E. Beitz, of New York.
Roy E. B. Bower, of California.
George H. Butler, of Illinois.
Leo J. Callanan, of Massachusetts.
Selden Chapin, of Pennsylvania.
Prescott Childs, of Massachusetts.
Lewis Clark, of Alabama.
Winthrop S. Greene, of Massachusetts.
William M. Gwynn, of California.
Julian F. Harrington, of Massachusetts.
George F. Kennan, of Wisconsin.
Edward P. Lawton, of Georgia.
Dale W. Maher, of Missouri.
Gordon P. Merriam, of Massachusetts.
C. Warwick Perkins, Jr., of Maryland.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in our breasts are yearnings for the unknown and aspirations for the divine. Do Thou enable us to realize these in the glow of feelings, in the vision of the intellect, and in the rapture of spirit. Our Heavenly Father, let Thy Kingdom come, in which abound righteousness, wisdom supernal, and the fruits of life everlasting. Herein is the priceless recompense that repels and conquers cruelty and avarice in low and high places. Always hold us, O God, to the vitality of integrity, of honor, and of truth; blessings upon all care-wearied minds and hearts. In Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 44

Resolved, That the special committee to investigate all matters pertaining to the replacement and conservation of wildlife is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1937, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation. Any unexpended balance of the total amount authorized for the use of said special committee under House Resolution 263 of the Seventy-third Congress is hereby continued available until said date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is any further money to be expended on this investigation?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There is an unexpended balance on hand?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Five thousand four hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. And the committee has spent how much of the original authorization?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Two thousand one hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. And there now remains unexpended $5,400?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it expected that the committee will expend all of that $5,400?

Mr. ROBERTSON. We hope to proceed as economically as possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to ask for any additional funds?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Not at this session.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman expect to in the future?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I would not want to bind myself on that.

Mr. BLANTON. We all have received the voluminous reports that have been printed and sent us recently. Before this committee began its operation we used to have plenty of wild ducks all over the United States. The Potomac River used to be full of them. Over here in the Chesapeake Bay you could find them everywhere. They were flying everywhere, even way down in the western Texas district of my friend Mr. THOMASON, in the El Paso country; all those tanks and lakes were full of wild ducks.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The gentleman does not mean "lame ducks"?

Mr. BLANTON. And now you can hardly find any wild ducks anywhere. What has the committee done with them?

Mr. ROBERTSON. We hope to assist the Federal agencies and the States to work out a program by which we can preserve that natural resource. We have been killing them off at the rate of 12,000,000 a year, and they have been reproducing at the rate of 10,000,000 a year. The gentleman is an expert in figures, and he can see what the ultimate result will be.

Mr. BLANTON. Last winter, after the hunting season was over, I saw numerous flocks of wild ducks going back up north, and I have not seen any since.

Mr. ROBERTSON. One reason the gentleman has not seen them in this section is that we have not had the normal food supply, and they had to go south.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I think that committee has done some good work. There are very few of our investigating committees in which the people of the country are so deeply interested as they are in this. They are much interested in the work being done by the committee. The committee has been very careful about its expenditures so far. As far as I am concerned, and as far as this side of the House is concerned, we are entirely willing to allow the gentleman from Virginia to continue with that work. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to; and a motion to consider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue today until 4 o'clock, the time to be controlled by and equally divided between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and myself, at the end of which time the first section of the bill shall be read and the Committee rise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that general debate continue until 4 o'clock or thereabouts today, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and himself. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill, with Mr. PARSONS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a little time to discuss the question of the consideration and disposition of private bills by the House of Representatives. This has been a troublesome question for many years. In every session of Congress we have very many hundred private bills introduced. Of those, several hundred find their way to the Private Calendar. The original rule under which these private bills were considered was that on Friday of every week it was in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of private bills. There are various kinds of private bills, such as arise from claims by individuals against the Government, and some that are based on claims arising from circumstances in war time; and there are also private bills restoring citizenship or removing a record of desertion of a veteran, and to provide for honorable discharge in the record.

The original rule provided that on the second and fourth Fridays of the month certain bills of a private nature should have preference, and on the first and third Fridays bills of a different character would have the preference. This rule was found to be absolutely unworkable. The procedure in the Committee of the Whole House is the same as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. General debate may be had, the bill read for amendment, amendments may be offered to every section, and those amendments debated. The result was that when the first bill was called in Committee of the Whole House, if there was a disposition to discuss the bill or to question its merits, that bill would consume the afternoon and no progress in the consideration of these many hundreds of claims was made. So the practice developed that, by unanimous consent, bills on the Private Calendar were called up and considered, if unobjected to. Any single objection would prevent further consideration of a bill at that time. This placed the fate of claims, some of them unquestionably just and meritorious, at the mercy of the whim of any single Member; and by reason of circumstances which brought about captious objections, bills were refused consideration that were entitled to consideration, and justice was denied those in whose behalf those bills were introduced.

Two or three years ago it was attempted to establish, by a change of the rule, a deferred list, whereby on certain days those bills which heretofore had been objected to would be considered and a certain number of objections would be required, rather than one objection. That rule was found to be unworkable also, and we have still been operating under the unanimous-consent procedure with respect to private bills.

In the last 20 years, if my recollection serves me correctly, we went into Committee of the Whole House for consideration of a private bill, under the rules that obtain in that Committee, just once, and that was for a very specific reason. There is no use going into the details at this time.

Now, it is admitted that these many hundreds of claims by American citizens against the Government for injuries or damages or loss which may have occurred, and for which the departments concerned admit that the Government in law and in equity would be held liable if it were a private individual, ought to be given an opportunity for consideration in the course of the life of a Congress.

The Committee on Rules in the last Congress authorized a subcommittee, headed by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] who is now Chairman of the Committee on Rules, to consider this matter. By reason of the press of other business, this committee has not had a formal meeting, but there is before the Committee on Rules an amendment to the private-bill rule which I desire to discuss at the present time.

The real practice is that each side of the House appoints one or two men whose duty it is to consider the merits of all private bills, to get all the information obtainable from the records of the committee reporting the bill, and from the administrative departments of the Government concerned in the subject matter of the bill, to discuss the bill, to ask questions about it, and if it lacks merit, to object to the bill. There are certain other Members who, as a matter of duty as a Member of the House, voluntarily perform that same service. So we have probably a half dozen men who interest themselves in the Private Calendar and give it this special consideration in order to protect the interests of the Government.

The proposition that is embodied in Resolution No. 41, which is a substitute for the present private-bills rule, which is paragraph 6 of rule XXIV of the House, in the first paragraph reads as follows:

Reports of bills of a private nature by the standing committees of the House shall contain a statement by the administrative department or office concerned with the subject matter therein.

Frequently when a department has reported adversely and opposed favorable consideration of a claim for some action of that department, that fact has not been clearly set forth in the report of the committee, and unless the activities of these men who make it their business to scrutinize the private bills, bring it out, the House is not aware of the fact that that department of the Government charged with the conduct which brought about the claim, is opposed to the bill.

Should the recommendation of such department or office be adverse to a favorable report, the report shall contain the specific reasons causing the committee to report the bill, nothwithstanding such adverse recommendations by the committee or office.

In other words, each written report accompanying the bill must contain the views and statements of the administrative department of the Government that is concerned with the subject matter of the bill, and if that is opposed to the favorable consideration of the bill, the report must state concisely and fully the reasons that actuated the committee in making the report, the opposition of the Government department notwithstanding.

Then this amendment proposes to give official recognition to the Membership that consider private bills in the following manner:

There shall be created an advisory board on private bills consisting of six Members of the House.

Three shall be chosen from the political party having the largest numerical representation in the House and three from the political party having the next largest numerical representation.

I might say there that the question of partisan politics has never, to my knowledge, entered into the consideration of any private bill in the last 20 years.

The members of the board shall be elected in the same manner as members of the standing committees of the House are elected.

The members of this board shall perform the functions which the objectors have been performing on the floor of the House and in their offices preparatory to their functions on the floor of the House.

The board shall review all bills on the Private Calendar, and, after consideration shall recommend for passage such bills as in their judgment merit such action. The board shall from time to time include all bills receiving such favorable recommendation in an omnibus bill. Such omnibus bill shall be reported by the chairman or any member of such board on the second and fourth Mondays of each month and it shall be referred to the Private Calendar.

In other words, if, as heretofore, a bill has been called up and discussion has been had by the Member introducing the bill, the chairman of such board or committee reporting it, and these members who would naturally constitute the board of advisers, the bill either receives or does not receive consideration.

This resolution proposes that bills go through substantially the same process, and, if approved, shall be grouped together in an omnibus bill for the further action of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. During the course of a Congress there are several thousand of these private bills. The gentleman from New Jersey will remember, I am sure, that in a number of Congresses there was reported favorably and placed on the calendar a bill which is over 100 years old and which sought to pay $104,000,000 to the Sevier heirs of the first Governor of Tennessee. That bill was favorably reported unanimously by the committee during several Congresses. In order to stop this bill one of these pernicious objectors to whom the gentleman refers——

Mr. LEHLBACH. I did not say they were pernicious; I said they performed a useful and valuable service.

Mr. BLANTON. One of these objectors found stored away in the basement of one of the departments of the Government a statement in the handwriting of Governor Sevier, of Tennessee, over his own signature, stating that the Government of the United States had paid him every dollar that was due him and that he gave a full release to the Government of the United States. Now, if it had not been for these pernicious objectors, that $104,000,000 long ago would have been taken out of the Treasury.

Let me make this further observation and I am done: Practically every Member of Congress from time to time has a private bill or numerous private bills. I am sure the gentleman will remember the case of one Member who introduced 426 private bills on 1 day and one of his bills involved a proposition which, if passed, would have cost the Treasury $5,000,000,000. All Members, of course, are interested in the passage of their own private bills. Were there to be such a board, half the members of it to be selected by each of the two major parties in Congress, a very liberal board might be selected, one which probably would put into this omnibus bill most of the private bills that were introduced. There is this danger in such a procedure.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I shall be glad to answer the gentleman from Texas. In the first place, I did not characterize these objectors as pernicious. I said repeatedly that they performed a useful and salutary service; and I want to endorse the service they have rendered by giving them official status.

As to whether or not the Membership would elect a board of six who would logroll for their own claims and the claims of the other Members who elected them to the board, for the purpose of getting money out the Treasury unjustly and not rightfully, and so misuse their position as members of this board, and as advisers, I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I do not believe he can find six men in the House who would lend themselves to such pernicious practice. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield to me further, the duty these objectors perform is the same duty that rests upon the shoulders of every Member of this Congress. A like duty and responsibility rests on all the Members.

The gentleman from New Jersey was here years ago, when during one night garden-seed votes were swapped for what was known as the "million-dollar mountain-top votes." Does not the gentleman remember that?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have no knowledge of it, did not at the time, and have not since. I do not indulge in that kind of politics.

Mr. BLANTON. I remember it, when the garden-seed votes were swapped for the mountain-top votes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not remember anything of the kind. No such incident had come to my attention or knowledge, either at that time or subsequently.

Now, if this resolution should be adopted these six objectors will be effective. They can stop a bill from being approved and included in the omnibus bill; the formation of this board will not stop the objectors from still continuing to protect the Treasury against unjust claims. It will give them more power. On the other hand, however, it will prevent a Member whose bill has been objected to early on a Friday or Saturday afternoon from, out of spite, objecting to every subsequent bill that is called up, a thing that has been done repeatedly on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose there were to be approved by this board an omnibus bill that had in it a bill from almost every Member of the House.

Does the gentleman think that there is any power on this House floor that could stop the passage of that omnibus bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly. They could strike out any particular claim in the omnibus bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That would bring up that old slogan, "United we stand, and divided we fall", and they would all stand together.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In any event, the House will act on these private bills; and no single Member, who may not have read the bill or who may have no knowledge whatever of its contents, could stop consideration of the bill, either because his own bill was stopped or because he did not like the man who introduced the bill to which he is objecting. We want to stop that kind of injustice to people who have meritorious claims and safeguard at the same time all private claims in such manner that only those of undoubted merit may be given consideration.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. May I say to the gentleman that I find when Members do take the time to read these bills more of them are stopped and would be stopped undoubtedly than have been stopped, and not for reasons of spite. I find many bills were passed during the last session that were meritorious and should have been passed; but on the other hand we have a lot of bills, for instance, that were to refund income taxes that had outrun the statute of limitations, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and it would have bankrupt the Federal Treasury if such policy were long pursued. For instance, on June 15, 11 bills were stopped in this House that had previously passed the Senate, amounting to $476,000. Practically all of them were tax refunds that were outlawed and not justified. Does the gentleman think this would benefit and help that situation?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Not at all. Those Senate bills may be stopped, under this rule, in precisely the same manner now as then.

Such omnibus bills shall be reported by the chairman or any members of such board on the second and fourth Mondays of each month and be referred to the Private Calendar.

On the Saturday following the introduction of an omnibus bill, or on any Saturday thereafter, it shall be in order for any member of the board to move that the House shall proceed to the consideration of such bill in the Committee of the Whole House. Upon the adoption of the motion the bill shall be read for amendment, and at the conclusion of the reading the bill shall be open to amendment in all its parts. No amendment shall be in order except to strike out paragraphs, to reduce amounts carried in the bill, or to provide limitations.

In other words, a rejected private bill may not be introduced by way of amendment into this omnibus bill, nor can you widen or increase the benefits sought in any bill by increasing its terms, nor can you offer pro forma amendments for the sake of wasting time and retarding consideration of the bill.

Mr. HESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HESS. What becomes of the bills that are rejected by this committee?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They are in exactly the same position as the private bills at the present time.

Mr. HESS. They cannot be considered any more?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, yes; they may be considered just as private bills are considered now, but these omnibus bills are grouped together and consist of those bills the merits of which cannot be questioned, bills that are approved by the various departments of the Government, that are approved by the committee, and approved by a special board of advisers. Then they will have to run the gauntlet of the Committee of the Whole House, and all of the other bills are considered just as they are at the present time and have been in the past.

This is to give a chance to all bills to be given consideration by the committee, then by these advisers who are the same fellows that do this job when we consider them on the floor under unanimous consent. Those that pass are freed from objection on the part of anyone, and then considered on their merits by the House in the form of an omnibus bill.

Upon the passage of any such omnibus bill, said bill shall be resolved into the several bills of which it is composed, and such original bills, with any amendments, shall be engrossed and proceedings thereon had as if said bills had been passed in the House severally.

Private bills not included in an omnibus bill shall remain on the Private Calendar subject to consideration in accordance with the general rules of the House.

All this does is to take the Members who give special consideration to private bills and give them an official status and allow them to consider separately and all together the merits of those bills that have been reported by the committes having jurisdiction and which presumably have the support of the departments of the Government concerned with the various bills. These bills, which up to that stage have had no objection whatsoever from any source, are grouped in an omnibus bill and are then considered one by one as sections of a bill and passed on by the House. Various parts may be stricken out, the amounts reduced, limitations may be imposed, and when that is done then the Committee rises after having passed the omnibus bill. These bills are then separated into their original bills and proceed in the Senate and elsewhere just as if they had been passed singly. This is to enable the meritorious bills to be grouped together and given opportunity for consideration in the House free from captious objections, to which these bills are inevitably subjected when considered under unanimous consent.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Has the gentleman given any consideration to setting up some tribunal outside of Congress to consider these minor private bills? It seems to me it is too bad that Congress must take up its time to consider so many of these private bills, which in many cases involve less than $100, and yet as far as the subject matter is concerned are very involved and, if given proper consideration, would take a great deal of time?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Consideration has been given to that question for a number of years and particularly to questions involving torts where the damages are of a very limited amount. The Court of Claims has considered it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] several Congresses ago introduced a bill with respect to the consideration of torts by the Court of Claims or some person or board to which the Court of Claims may refer these cases, in order to examine and report back. The House, however, has been unwilling to divest itself of authority and control in reference to paying out money that would result from the approval of these claims. I think the question has been considered also in the Senate. I do think the solution suggested by the gentleman from Kansas is the best solution; but pending that, and by reason of the fact it seems impossible to secure such a solution, this amendment to the Private Calendar rule has been introduced in order that equity and justice may be done citizens concerning whose claims there is no reasonable doubt and no question whatsoever; but merely because of the cumbersomeness of our procedure they are denied simple justice.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from New Jersey again yield to me?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. If you would permit only bills to go into this omnibus bill that did not involve over $500, I would go along with the gentleman without hesitation; but the gentleman will recall that in the last session there came here on the Private Calendar, with a unanimous committee report, a bill that was known as the "Minnesota fire bill" which would have caused $12,000,000 to be paid out of the Treasury, and out of that amount a national lobbyist would have received $1,250,000 as a fee. We defeated that bill here in the House by a tremendous majority. Suppose a bill like that were to be put into the omnibus bill, how much time would we have for consideration of such a measure?

Mr. LEHLBACH. You would have all the time that offering amendments or motions to strike out, and so forth, would allow you in Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Which would be about 5 minutes, and how could we discuss a proposition of that kind logically in 5 minutes?

Mr. LEHLBACH. How many times in Committee of the Whole House or in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has the gentleman seen 45 minutes given to the discussion of an amendment by unanimous consent, notwithstanding the fact that the rule is 5 minutes on the side?

Mr. BLANTON. But that is according to the mood of the House, and the House has just as many different moods as 435 individuals.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Whatever the House seeks to do is the will of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does the gentleman advocate preventing the House from exercising its will because he does not approve?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want the House to exercise its will, but I have seen 100 bills passed here in 30 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Well, there was no objection to them.

Mr. BLANTON. It is true there was no objection to them, and that is why they passed. It is hard to improve upon our present rules.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This thought occurs to me: A great many bills on the Private Calendar come from the War Department involving cases of veterans as a result of decisions of courts martial, which perhaps have been too severe. There is no appeal from the decision of a court martial. Has the gentleman given any thought to the advisability of setting up a board of review in the War Department which might act as a court of appeals in such cases?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That question is not germane to the consideration of private bills in the House.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It would take a great many bills off the Private Calendar if the War Department had power to alter or review decisions of courts martial which have been unduly severe.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Has not the President that power?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Not after the decision is once promulgated. I think the decision is then final. We have a great many bills of that kind on the Private Calendar.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know of instances where the President has modified the penalties imposed by a court martial.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think that is before the decision is actually promulgated.

Mr. LEHLBACH. At least, the decision has been announced in the papers and subsequently the President has set it aside or modified it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. My information is that after the decision is once approved, it is final.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If it is approved by the President, yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], who, I believe, is one of the ablest parliamentarians in the House, has made a real contribution to a subject which is of vital interest to every Member of this House.

Last June the distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee and now our beloved majority leader [Mr. BANKHEAD] appointed a subcommittee, of which I am chairman, and on which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] also were appointed, to study the rules of the House in an attempt to devise some means of improving the handling of the Private Calendar. This subject is very much like the weather. It has been talked about for 20 years at least, and nothing much done about it. About 2 years ago, however, we tried to do something about it, and a rule was brought in and adopted, drafted by the distinguished member of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD]. It was found out, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has said, that this rule was not workable.

Complaints about the handling of the Private Calendar have been almost universal. Last June, after I was appointed chairman, I proceeded to study the matter. I wrote at least twice to every sitting Member of the Congress to get his views. Several of them sent proposed bills and others suggestions as to how the rule might be improved. The gentleman from New Jersey sent his proposal, to which he has just referred. We then communicated with every parliamentary body in the world which has any system similar to ours. We had the Congressional Library make thorough research of how the parliamentary bodies throughout the world handle private bills or similar measures.

We have gathered together all of these ideas, including suggestions from the Court of Claims and from ex-Members of Congress who have given the matter a great deal of study. We have not held any meetings of the subcommittee, but we propose to do so in the very near future. During the last month some of us have been busy about other matters and have not been able to give the subject as much attention as we would have liked.

The proposal of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is one of many which we shall shortly consider. For the moment I am not prepared to say whether I would endorse it or not. The first paragraph at least seems to be an improvement over the present method of handling these private bills, in that a mere disapproval by the department will not furnish an objection to the bill itself, if the committee can give a cogent reason why the bill should pass, the opinion of the department to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, working out a new rule for consideration of the Private Calendar is not an easy subject to handle. Everybody says something should be done about it. That is a premise with which we all agree. How to do it is the problem.

My purpose in taking the floor at this time is to request Members, especially the new Members, with whom I may not have communicated, to give the matter serious and deliberate thought.

Some suggestions have been made here about the amount involved in the bill. Now, frankly, it has never impressed me that a bill should be objected to merely because of the amount involved. If the bill is meritorious and one of our citizens is entitled to relief from his own Government, he should receive it whether it is $1 or $1,000,000.

I know many of our citizens who have been haunting the corridors of this building and of the House Office Buildings for nearly a generation trying to get what they felt was justice, and what many Members also felt was justice, and what sometimes the entire Claims Committee felt was justice. It, therefore, always, year after year, seemed a great injustice to them to have one or two Members object to the bill merely because they thought the amount was too large, or for some other reason, arbitrary or otherwise. It has never seemed to me as fair to take a technical or arbitrary position from the viewpoint of a Government agency to the injury of our citizens.

It makes no difference in my view as to what is the amount involved, whether $1,000,000 or $10,000,000. If the claimant corporation or individual has had an injustice done to it by the Government, the amount should be paid to that person or corporation, no matter what kind of a person or corporation is involved. Incidentally, objections are often made to certain bills, as a class.

If I recall correctly, in the last session of Congress a group of bills which were in the interest of insurance companies, and which sought to get back the money held by the Government to which the Government was not in fairness entitled, were all objected to solely because "horrible" insurance companies would get the money. I do not believe that is the considerate, deliberate attitude of most of the Members here. I, therefore, ask the Members to keep supplying our committee with the suggestions they may have as to remedying the rule with reference to the consideration of private bills, and in doing so you will be doing a real service to the House itself and to our people throughout the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. Has the gentleman made any computation or has the committee to which he refers made any computation as to how much money goes out of the Treasury because of the Private Calendar every session?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; we have not gone into that phase of it.

Mr. REILLY. I think the committee ought to do so.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I don't know whether that is a matter of really vital concern. Of course, the Treasury must be safeguarded, but I do not believe that an objection to a bill merely because it takes money out of the Treasury is a valid objection.

Mr. REILLY. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some provision in the rule where a bill calling for $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 or $5,000,000 should receive more consideration than a bill calling for a few thousand dollars?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, yes; I agree to that, surely, but many of those bills are merely authorizations to permit the claimant to go to the Court of Claims and there prove his right to the money. Even then he does not get the money until it is appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations. That appropriation is sometimes delayed, and if it should be too severe a strain on the Treasury it would be delayed further.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman from New York that if the claim is just, it makes no difference whether it is $1 or $10,000,000, but the gentleman from New York is a member of one of the influential leading law firms of the Nation. When his firm has a suit in court involving $10,000,000, it takes a week or more to try that suit. They do not try it on affidavits. His firm would not allow a judge to permit an affidavit to be read in evidence in that suit. They require legal testimony, and they try it according to law. On the other hand, when you try a $10,000,000 case against the Government before a committee of Congress, it is tried on affidavits.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree with the gentleman. Of course the Claims Committee or whatever committee handles the matter should go into it thoroughly and be convinced of the merits and justice of the claim.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from New York mentioned insurance companies. Is it not a fact that he referred rather to bonding companies?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think I should have said surety companies.

Mr. TRUAX. Bonding and surety companies, who gave bonds that were forfeited. Then they come into this Congress and want the Treasury to refund the money that they had to pay by reason of their own business.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But many of those cases are meritorious and no harm has been done to the Government, and the money should in fairness be refunded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the debate thus far on this bill has covered a wide variety of subjects. All of it has been interesting and I am sure all of it will constitute a real contribution to the intellectual and literary thought of the Nation. But I believe we ought to come around now to at least some discussion and consideration of the matter really before the House. Our friends on the Republican side yesterday had quite a good deal of fun, perhaps—I hope they enjoyed it—in indulging in some pot-shotting at the Democrats, the President, and the recovery program and what not. I was moved to a feeling of a great deal of sympathy and commiseration for those good gentlemen. Personally we love them all. I sincerely sympathize with these boys on the left. They are very few in number. I sympathize with them because I have been here in this House when we had almost as few on this side of the aisle. Some of us know what it is to have that forlorn, dejected feeling, but I can assure you brethren that you shall be protected in your constitutional rights to object and criticise. Beyond that we are not going to let you do very much, because I anticipate, certainly on matters of major policies, that the Democrats in this House, following the plain mandate of the overwhelming majority of the people of the country, thousands of whom are members of your party, are going to follow the leadership of the President, especially on matters pertaining to the Budget. I sympathize with you gentlemen because you are in a very delicate position in another regard.

We will be hearing a lot about recovery from now on, but there are going to be two kinds of recovery that we have in mind. One is economic recovery, which is the object of the President and the administration, and the other is political recovery in which you gentlemen are, of course, very properly interested. The irony of it, and that which places you gentlemen in a very hot spot, is that in order to have your political recovery promoted, it is necessary to retard the economic recovery. I do not mean for an instant that there is any gentleman over there who would deliberately retard economic recovery for political advantage, but I say that it puts a fellow in a hot spot, does it not, when he knows perfectly well that if the great objective of the President and his party succeeds, as it is succeeding and is going to succeed, thereby his chances for political recovery are, by the same ratio, getting still further down in the political scale?

But I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the people of the country whom we represent are more interested today in economic recovery than they are in political recovery, and I believe they are going to view this Congress individually and collectively, and are going to measure and appraise us on the basis of what we appear to be sincerely trying to do to bring about that hoped-for objective.

The independent offices appropriation bill, I am very happy to say, comes to you today with very much better hope of smooth sailing and easy and quick passage than it did last year. There is very little legislation in the bill. I think there is practically none of any controversial nature.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which considered the independent offices appropriation bill, convened on December 4 and conducted hearings which we believe have been thorough and exhaustive. Those hearings are available for your information.

At this point I want to pay my compliments and my respects, and to express my appreciation to the minority members of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kansas,

Mr. LAMBERTSON, and the distinguished, able, and industrious gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH]. [Applause.]

We do not have any politics in this subcommittee. It may break out a little here, but we work together smoothly and conscientiously, and we have tried to bring you the right kind of a bill.

What ought to be the functions of an appropriations committee and the House of Representatives in considering appropriation bills? I conceive it to be twofold. First, to protect the Treasury of the United States against unwarranted expenditures. Undoubtedly that is the prime function; but I think of almost equal, if not equal importance, is the duty of a legislative body to adequately provide for needed and justifiable public expenditures. With that twofold and kindred motive in mind, we have approached this subject, and this bill is the result of our deliberations.

The bill differs very slightly from the Budget estimates which were sent to Congress; and, for the benefit of some of our colleagues who have so recently joined us, may I say that the method of appropriating funds for the establishments of the Government, since the adoption of the budgetary system, is for very careful hearings to be held by the Bureau of the Budget, which is an advisory agency of the President, and as a result of those hearings the President makes his recommendations to Congress for appropriations. So the Budget is the President's recommendation to Congress. Of course the Budget and its findings are not binding upon this body. We may decrease or increase appropriations, or we may totally refuse to appropriate, or we may add items that were not considered by the Budget. However, it has been proven to us by experience under administrations of both parties that the safe way to handle appropriations is to follow as largely as possible the conclusions of the Bureau of the Budget, except where they do not appear to be based upon sound conclusions. Therefore, the independent offices bill today is, with only one or two exceptions, following the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget.

The bill provides appropriations for some thirty-odd independent establishments of the Government, meaning by that, those agencies of the Government that are not under Cabinet officers, excluding, of course, the various new, independent corporations, many of which we do not have to appropriate for, because they are self-financing institutions.

Of course, by far, the major item in the bill is that providing for the vast appropriations for the Veterans' Administration. The total amount in the bill this year is $776,916,706. It is $158,671,904 above the actual appropriations for comparable activities for 1935, but when you take into account the fact that the 1935 act includes specific amounts on the basis of 90-percent salaries, while the present bill provides for 100-percent salaries, the actual net increase in the bill over the current appropriations for comparable items is but $135,527,544, of which $117,897,904 is accounted for in the veterans' appropriation item, and $98,000,000 of the $117,000,000 is provided for because of what is known as "Public, No. 141", which was the action of the legislative body in overriding the President's veto.

In many of the departments in this bill there have been actual reductions in forces and reductions in administrative expense. Now, we are hearing a great deal, and we shall hear much more, about the growth of bureaus and departments and the large accretion in public personnel, but very often that observation is predicated upon our view of these temporary, emergency organizations; but when you come to the regular Government establishments, for which the regular, ordinary Budget applies, you will find upon careful scrutiny and examination that it is being held well within the Budget requirements and well within the sound credit of the Government.

So we feel that we can commend to your kindly consideration today this bill. As I have stated, it covers some thirty-odd Government departments. I am not going to take your time, and it would be impossible to do so, to stand here and give you a careful analysis of those various organizations and the necessity for their appropriations; but in every instance their representatives appeared before our committee and gave us what we thought were justifications for the appropriations granted; and those hearings and those conclusions are available for your consideration.

There are several of these institutions, however, that I think I should comment upon; and I shall be glad to respond, if I can, to any inquiries that you may care to make about others.

On yesterday a number of times Members referred to the Home Loan Bank Board. There were Members who praised it and complimented it and others who condemned it. I think one or two things ought to be emphasized here in order that the record may be straight and that our minds may be clear.

First, permit me to recall to you the fact that the Home Loan Bank Board, as constituted by Congress, and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, were charged by us with the duty of making legal loans to people and not granting relief. So it is not fair to get up on the floor of the House and move our colleagues to tears by telling them about some poor widow who lost her home because the Home Owners' Loan Corporation did not make her a loan, when you and I told them that they could not make her a loan unless she had certain security based upon a present prospect of repayment of the loan. So let us bear in mind the fact that they are charged by us with the duty of making legal loans with a fair prospect of repayment. In making those loans they must require legal security. They must require sound and legal titles. They do not have as Government agencies and institutions that latitude that private lending institutions might have. I say that without any particular desire to defend anybody or anything, because I have heard complaints, just as many of you have.

The next thing to which I want to call your attention is that while this bill carries $264,043 for the Home Loan Bank Board—now, not the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Home Loan Bank Board does not make any loans, but the Home Owners' Loan Corporation does make the loans—this carries an appropriation of $264,043 for the Home Loan Bank Board, but it is merely a reappropriation of funds that this Board has collected in fees and covered into the ordinary receipts of the Treasury. The Home Loan Bank Board and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are self-paying institutions.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right at this point?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The $264,000 they collected in fees was collected from the Virginia constitutents of the gentleman from Roanoke and from my constituents down in Texas. It is public money. This home-loan institution may have satisfied the constituents of the gentleman from Virginia, but they have not satisfied mine. I may say to the gentleman from Virginia this further, that if he will get the names of the ones who control this Board he will see that they are identically the same persons who control the home-loan bank; they are one and identically the same persons. There is no difference between them at all. This is true, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is substantially true, I think.

Mr. BLANTON. The fees are collected from the public.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is quite true. The gentleman called attention to complaints made by those who were not able to secure loans, but he overlooks the fact that thousands and thousands of American citizens have had their homes saved because of this agency.

Mr. BLANTON. And thousands of them have had mortgages on their homes foreclosed and they are now homeless.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Attention should also be called to the fact that even though fees were collected they represent only about 70 percent of what the very same people would have had to pay to obtain similar loans from private agencies.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will not the gentleman from Virginia tell us something about the wholesale division of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation which has aided the great banks and individuals whose property was not in danger? There are thousands of such cases throughout the country.

Mr. WOODRUM. I prefaced my remarks, I may say to the gentleman, by stating that I was not here to defend these institutions for doing what they should not have done. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the home-loan bank stand on their records. They may have done some things for which they are justly to be criticized, but I want the record kept straight that they are supposed to make loans and not to hand out charity.

Mr. SWEENEY. That is true; I agree with that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am sure the gentleman does not want to leave the impression that the criticism was directed entirely and solely to illegal loans. The criticism was directed toward inefficiency and delay in making loans.

Mr. WOODRUM. Another agency appropriated for in this bill to which I desire to direct attention is the Federal Communications Commission. The Communications Act of 1934 abolished the Federal Radio Commission, which, as you know, had jurisdiction over radio, the authority and duty of licensing radio communication, and full control of wave lengths and the facilities of the air. The act of 1934 abolished this commission and set up another to take its place—the Communications Commission—imposing upon it the duty of regulating telephone, telegraph, cable, and all other forms of electrical communication. These duties previously had been vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Post Office Department, and the State Department.

This Commission, of course, shows a very large additional appropriation—$1,500,000 for the fiscal year 1936, for salaries and expenses, as compared with $651,885 for 1935. This Commission has had a large increase in its personnel; but it is another instance, Mr. Chairman, where we constitute a body and impose duties upon it and then find ourselves in the unpleasant situation of having to pay the bill when the bill is presented.

For just a minute or two I direct attention to another new item which appears in this bill, and in the case of which the committee has felt called upon to make a substantial reduction in its estimate for appropriations, and this is the Securities and Exchange Commission.

You will recall, of course, the Securities and Exchange Act which we passed in the closing days of the last Congress set up this Commission and imposed upon it very wide and extensive powers and duties, the extent of which I doubt whether very many of us realized at the time; but, if you in your calmer moments will study the act, you will see where we gave this new organization such vast and comprehensive powers and duties that were they really to undertake to perform them it would cause the building of a gigantic governmental institution.

Their request for appropriations for the first year of their operations was $4,277,000. It contemplated a personnel of 1,137, of which 719 were to be in the Department, and 418 in the field. This estimate was reduced by the Bureau of the Budget to $2,340,000. The Committee on Appropriations has made a further reduction to $1,800,000, based on the statement made in the hearings that they are running currently on the basis of about $150,000 a month. From the $1,800,000 the committee has deducted $150,756 which was erroneously included for rent. Space for this organization will be provided next year by the National Park Service.

Our hearings show that the great duties imposed upon this Commission are such that if they undertake to organize quickly and precipitately they will be required to send out in the field a vast army of agents, inspectors, investigators, and what not; and it was the deliberate judgment of this committee that this Commission should go along on its present basis at least for its first fiscal year, gain experience and knowledge of conditions, and then show to Congress in the future, if they need it, the necessity for the large organization and the further appropriations for which they were asking.

Now, may I say in fairness and I believe I voice the sentiment of every member of the committee when I say that this reduction in this appropriation is in no sense of the word any reflection upon this Commission or any lack of appreciation of the responsibility and difficulty of their work.

As I have stated previously, and I reiterate, the reason for our action in cutting their appropriation was that we believed they were expanding too rapidly, that they could not possibly build up an efficient personnel and an efficient organization and build it that quickly. So we made that cut in their appropriation.

I come now to the larger item in the bill.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SISSON. Perhaps the gentleman intends to cover the matter of the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission, and, if so, I do not want to disturb the continuity of the gentleman's remarks. However, if it is just as convenient, I should like to ask one or two questions about that appropriation at this time.

Mr. WOODRUM. I would be glad to answer the gentleman's questions.

Mr. SISSON. I note that the appropriation has been reduced $365,421. On page 7 of the report it speaks of the milk investigation. I am wondering if, in the appropriation, there is taken into consideration any amount for the continuation of the investigation of the dairy industry by the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. WOODRUM. My understanding is they have funds to continue the investigation and expect to make a further study and conduct a survey of that at Philadelphia.

Mr. SISSON. My understanding is from a rather recent talk with them that they also want to continue that investigation in certain milksheds other than Connecticut and Philadelphia, and that they would need some considerable amount over and above the original $30,000. I am wondering if that is included, or if any further amount is included?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is not included, and there was no request made for that appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. It will be necessary for the Federal Trade Commission if they get any more money to make a request for a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; that is correct. I should like now to call attention to this chart relating to appropriations for the Veterans' Administration. The total appropriation asked for the year 1936 is $705,420,000, an increase of something like $159,000,000 over the 1935 appropriation. I have had this table prepared and I shall insert a summary of it in the RECORD for easy reference.

Veterans' Administration

| Appropriation title | Appropriation 1934 | Appropriation 1935 | Estimated appropriation 1936 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Salaries and expenses | $85,773,000 | $86,740,099 | $86,700,000 |
| Printing and binding | 150,000 | 130,000 | 125,000 |
| Pensions and compensation | 319,230,000 | 394,704,247 | 400,760,000 |
| Military and naval insurance | 123,000,000 | 118,381,000 | 116,910,000 |
| Hospital and domiciliary facilities and services | 1,000,000 | | 925,000 |
| Adjusted-service certificate fund | 50,000,000 | 50,000,000 | 100,000,000 |
| Adjusted service and dependent pay | 2,835,000 | 1,286,000 | |
| Total veterans' activities | 581,988,000 | 546,748,096 | 705,420,000 |
| Civil service retirement and disability appropriated fund | 20,850,000 | 20,850,000 | |
| Total appropriated funds | 602,838,000 | [1] 672,091,346 | 705,420,000 |

[1] Includes estimated supplemental appropriations: Pensions, $98,412,250; military and naval insurance, $6,081,000.

The first item—and, of course, the one that usually interests us more than anything else—is that relating to salaries and expenses. The amount asked for in 1936 is $86,700,000. This item in the Veterans' Administration appropriation covers the following activities:

Salaries and operating expenses of the central office in Washington, the field offices, hospitals, homes, and supply depots; the cost of travel and examination of beneficiaries; payment of burial expenses and reimbursement for such expenses; repairs and alterations to hospitals, homes, and other property in which Veterans' Administration facilities are housed; payments to contract facilities wherein Veterans' Administration patients are hospitalized; reimbursements to States at the statutory rate for those veterans cared for in State soldiers' homes who are eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration homes for domiciliary care; in general, all items of expense which are not direct monetary benefits to the veterans.

That is all covered in this item.

There is an actual reduction in the administrative expenses of the Veterans' Administration for the fiscal year 1936 of $5,961,499, and we have not cut down on any of the benefits. This has been done without taking away any benefits from the veterans, and, on the contrary, we are extending greater benefits by reason of the action of the last Congress in extending the benefit payments to our veterans.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has there not been a cut in the allowance for food for the veterans?

Mr. WOODRUM. My understanding is there has been absolutely no withdrawal of any facilities or benefits or comforts from the veterans.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman if any of this money will be used for the construction of new buildings?

Mr. WOODRUM. None whatever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There is nothing in this appropriation for buildings?

Mr. WOODRUM. None in this particular item.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But in other items?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. There is another item, which I shall discuss later.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOLTON. Those salaries are on the basis of 100 percent?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. According to what the gentleman says, then the cost of foodstuff has not gone up in the past year?

Mr. WOODRUM. The cost of foodstuff has gone up; yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Still the same appropriation is made.

Mr. WOODRUM. The reduction in administrative expenses has been brought about by a reduction of 115 of the personnel in the central office and 1,997 in the field. That has been brought about notwithstanding the addition of 4,576 beds made available to veterans over what was available in 1934 and 1,693 over 1935.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman stated there were 1,997 or more of the personnel removed from the service in the field. What was the character of the services which they rendered?

Mr. WOODRUM. This falls mostly in the class of regional offices and comes about through consolidation of facilities and failure to fill vacancies without in any way impairing the service rendered to the veterans.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Without intending to criticize the committee, does not the gentleman believe that the item of salary and expenses is too high now and can be further reduced?

Mr. WOODRUM. No. I think it is the lowest in the Government service, and the gentleman will appreciate that fact in just a moment.

Mr. CULKIN. It is over 10 percent of the total disbursements now?

Mr. WOODRUM. No. This covers a great deal more than salaries. I read the gentleman a list of what this includes.

Mr. CULKIN. I understand, but it is administration expenses.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is administration expenses, yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Could the gentleman inform us how much has been spent on salaries?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. Before I leave that, may I call attention to this fact: This item of $86,700,000 is on the basis of 100-percent salaries, whereas a larger amount in 1935 was only on the basis of 90-percent salaries, so notwithstanding putting the salaries back they have absorbed that, they have absorbed all of these additional expenses, and still there is an actual reduction in the administrative cost of the item as I have indicated.

Mr. MILLARD. What was the amount for salaries and expenses? Could the gentleman separate the two?

Mr. WOODRUM. $52,306,320 for salaries.

Mr. MILLARD. For salaries?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 additional minutes.

I want to comment on one other matter and I have given this figure to the committee before.

The total amount in the appropriation for 1934, and I do not have the break-down on this for 1935 and 1936, but this will demonstrate what I am getting at, for direct benefits to the veterans, which means actual payments they receive and hospitalization, amounted to $545,838,321.57, and the administrative expenses amounted to $18,723,822, or 3.43 percent of the total appropriation.

I do not believe there is another Government agency that can make such a showing. There is certainly not one in my bill. Out of this total amount the veteran gets, in direct benefits, which means actual money paid to the veteran or dependents, 87.21 percent of every dollar we appropriate, and in hospitalization, travel, direct expenses connected with his hospitalization and domiciliary and medical care, 9.36 percent of the total appropriation, or a total of about 96 percent of every dollar that we appropriate for veterans goes to the veteran and less than 4 percent for administration.

Passing over the item of printing and binding, which is routine, we come to pensions and compensation.

The amount carried in the bill for 1935 for pensions and compensation, which means direct payments made to veterans and their dependents, was $296,291,997. There will be a deficiency appropriation of $98,412,250 occasioned by the change of law when the President's veto was overridden, bringing the fund up to the amount asked for. The natural or normal increase in pensions and payments brings this fund up to $400,760,000.

Military and naval insurance represents the payments that the Government is making on the old war-risk insurance policies. We often hear it said, Mr. Chairman, that the veterans have paid for this insurance. Out of something over $1,000,000,000 that the Government has already paid for war-risk insurance the veterans actually paid about one-fourth of that amount, or something like $456,000,000. So our annual contribution to the old war-risk insurance fund, which we are now paying, has been running about $112,000,000, but you will recall that the Economy Act put a stop date on filing new suits on these old policies. The action of the House in putting on that limitation was disapproved by the Supreme Court and that let in a large number of new cases which will bring about this deficiency appropriation of something like $6,000,000, and bring that fund up to a figure of about $116,000,000 a year until we finish appropriating for a balance of about $600,000,000 more for that obligation.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. The amount for pensions and compensation for 1935 is $394,000,000. Does the difference between the figure for 1935 and 1936 represent the difference occasioned by the overriding of the President's veto, amounting to only $6,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; $6,000,000 is the natural increase in new claims filed.

Mr. SIROVICH. What would be that increase?

Mr. WOODRUM. That increase is $98,412,250. We appropriated for 1935, $296,000,000 plus, and we will have to augment that with a deficiency appropriation to take care of the overriding of the President's veto.

Mr. HESS. Are there any changes in the rates of pensions?

Mr. WOODRUM. No changes since the action on the President's veto message.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman stated that we would appropriate in the future $600,000,000 to take care of the war-risk insurance. I wish the gentleman would amplify that statement.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is a continuing obligation on the part of the Government until we liquidate all of those old policies.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is there a present direct obligation of $600,000,000 yet remaining?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the actuarial estimate of what the Government will ultimately contribute on the war-risk insurance policies, in addition to appropriations already made. Perhaps I should make this statement in order to make the matter clear. You understand that the war-risk policies were superseded by Government life insurance and that is self-sustaining and we do not appropriate for it. The premiums on the policies pay for that. This fund is to take care of the old war-risk insurance policies on which the veterans paid about one-fourth and the Government three-fourths.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Have not thousands of those policies lapsed?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; certainly; thousands of them have lapsed; otherwise the obligation would be greater.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Does the gentleman mean to state that those that are in force and for which the Government has a direct obligation will amount to $600,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; that is what I mean to state. It is a staggering figure.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I am simply asking this question for information. What is the $600,000,000 that goes into the Veterans' Bureau for the war-risk insurance policies?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is the ultimate liability on the Government to finally liquidate all of the old war-risk insurance policies.

Mr. FISH. Is there any set date for liquidation?

Mr. WOODRUM. No.

Mr. FISH. In other words, what is the reason for appropriating $600,000,000 now?

Mr. WOODRUM. We are not appropriating it now.

Mr. FISH. That is what I did not understand.

Mr. WOODRUM. One hundred and sixteen million dollars is the amount now appropriated.

Hospital and domiciliary facilities is the fund that is used for repairs and alterations and additions to existing Government institutions. We did not make any appropriation in 1935. The Veterans' Administration is asking now for authorization to use $925,000 of a number of different funds. Gentlemen will recall that we have from time to time had various construction acts for the building of hospitals, at different points, and under different circumstances. There is a number of those acts. The authorization has already been made; and if this expenditure is authorized, there will still be left about $4,000,000 in construction acts available for such things as may be needed in the future.

Mr. FISH. Is not that $116,000,000 for the adjusted-service certificates, for liquidation?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; we have not come to that yet.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Does that include the $600,000,000 of liability? Does that include the thousands of suits that have been filed in the United States courts?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And if they are defeated by that action, that sum will be reduced accordingly.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. The $600,000,000 is an actuarial estimate. It is a guess based on so many cases being lost and so many having died and what not. We may take it for what it may be worth.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mrs. KAHN. This is not a question strictly along the lines the gentleman is talking, but a lot of interest has been manifested in the amount of money that is in the reserve, in the surplus, for these men. I wonder if the gentleman has any idea of how much money that is?

Mr. WOODRUM. I could not answer that.

Mr. FISH. I think I can answer that. It is $160,000,000.

Mrs. KAHN. Was not something in the way of $180,000,000 put in?

Mr. FISH. Not for many years. There has been $1,300,000,000 appropriated altogether by Congress to liquidate the adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. WOODRUM. We have been putting about $50,000,000 a year in that fund. It is not what the actuaries say we ought to put in. When we made it possible for the veterans to borrow 50 percent of their certificates, we put $200,000,000 in. In 1934 we put $50,000,000 in and in 1935, $50,000,000, and this year they have thought that we ought to put in $100,000,000 to bring it up to present indications. But perhaps that will all be taken care of in another way.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I am under the impression that we put in the reserve last year approximately $112,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Fifty million dollars last year.

Mr. BOILEAU. The actuaries claim that approximately $150,000,000 is necessary in order to build up a sufficient fund.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. We are away behind on that. Next, the civil-service retirement and disability fund. We have been putting $20,850,000 a year into that, and again we are behind according to the actuaries' estimates on the Government's obligations to that fund. It was not in this bill, but in the Civil Service Commission appropriation, we are giving $40,000,000 to the fund, which is just a little less than the actuaries say should be put in.

I should like to make another point in which I think the Members of the House will be interested, in connection with this veterans' appropriation. It is in the matter of the cost of hospitalization. The Veterans' Administration has made a careful study of the comparative cost of hospitalizing veterans in private, contract institutions, as compared with the cost of hospitalizing in their own institutions. It has been referred to here very often on the floor of the House, and our distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] used to periodically ask me about that, and we never agreed upon it. They have made a very careful study of that. They find that the hospitalized patients in contract hospitals cost approximately $7 per patient per day and that the same service—I should say perhaps a better service—in Government hospitals runs from $3.50 to $3.75 per patient per bed per day.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does that take into consideration interest on the investment and depreciation?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think it does, but you never figure that in Government activities.

Mr. KNUTSON. But you should in making a comparison.

Mr. WOODRUM. If you figure it on a comparative basis, the difference in the service that they get would account for that. I say this, without in any way reflecting on the private hospital or private institution, that the veterans in these Government hospitals do get the finest medical attention they can have, and the finest care and attention and food. If you have not done so, I wish every Member of this House would try to make it possible to visit at some time one of these Government hospitals. Just drop in without being announced, and you will find it the acme of perfection and attention.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I rise to confirm what the gentleman has said. I was on an investigating committee, investigating a great many Government hospitals, and I found them just as the gentleman has described.

Mr. WOODRUM. During this past summer I visited a veterans' hospital at Waco, Tex., in the district of the able and conscientious and distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. CROSS], though he did not happen to be there at the time to extend me the right hand of fellowship. I dropped in without being announced. It is a mental institution. I spent a day with Dr. Rubui, that very splendid physician in charge of that institution, and I was highly delighted and got great consolation in knowing that the Government was there doing everything that money and care could do for those poor unfortunate people. I found this, however, and I am glad to see it remedied in this bill. We have been neglectful of the facilities for our colored veterans, and that applies all over the country.

In this bill funds are provided. In this $925,000 to which I have alluded, the Veterans' Administration have plans under way to add facilities at existing institutions whereby the colored veterans will be given everything that the American citizen would want him to have.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know that is absolutely the case. I think we also have been neglectful in our care of women veterans so far as Government facilities are concerned. Have you any appropriation for added buildings for them?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not that I know of. I know the committee would be very sympathetic with any showing that could be made to justify some such appropriation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman believe the committee would entertain an item of appropriation in this bill for the women patients?

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee would want it to go through the regular channels and be submitted to the Veterans' Administration for their consideration, and to the Budget, and hear what they have to say about it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. One other question. Of course, the expense of hospitalization of the veteran in diagnostic clinics is much greater than in other veteran hospitals.

Mr. WOODRUM. Much greater; yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Have you the figure?

Mr. WOODRUM. The figure I gave was an average figure, based on an average of all classes of cases. Of course, the tubercular cases are very expensive cases, and the general medical cases also. The neuropsychiatric cases are not so expensive, but the figure I gave was an average figure.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The diagnostic clinic is much greater?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And the gentleman's committee appropriated every penny that General Hines asked for to be spent for repairs and additions to the hospital?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much have we invested in hospitals up to the present time?

Mr. WOODRUM. My recollection is something over $149,943,000 in new construction since the war.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is that all?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think that is enough; it is ample; and I will say that they are being taken care of.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The $400,760,000 is the amount requested by the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I should like to know if the money is included in this appropriation bill which we use to take care of the widows and orphans?

Mr. WOODRUM. The widows' and orphans' pensions; yes, sir.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does this appropriation provide for any increase in that compensation, in those payments today?

Mr. WOODRUM. This appropriation could not, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma, because that would require a change in the basic law which would have to come from a legislative committee. The function of this committee is to provide funds for the basic law that Congress has heretofore enacted. This carries sufficient funds to pay for the widows' and orphans' pensions which we passed at the last session of Congress, Public, No. 484.

Mr. NICHOLS. I think we ought to do something to take care of a lot of these folks that we are neglecting.

Mr. WOODRUM. The legislative committee would have to take care of that.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I cannot tell from that chart just what the total administrative expense for the Veterans' Administration amounts to. I notice it shows salaries and expenses, and then down below, "Civil service."

Mr. WOODRUM. The "Civil service" is out of the bill. The civil-service retirement fund was transferred to the Civil Service Commission. It was in in 1934 and 1935, but it is out now. This item here is the total administrative expense of the Veterans' Administration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless there are some further questions, I think I have consumed all the time I should consume.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman passed the section with reference to the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. If the gentleman will return to that, I notice in the report on the bill this particular section carries an increase of $113,008 above the current appropriation, and that $66,418 is required to restore salaries to the 100-percent basis. Would the gentleman explain that just a little?

Mr. WOODRUM. Explain the restoration of salaries to the 100-percent basis?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. In all of these items we are carrying 100-percent salaries. That is, full salary restoration for the next year in all of these departments.

Mr. WEARIN. And that is the reason for this particular action?

Mr. WOODRUM. There is an increase in every department, which restores their salaries from 95 percent as at present to 100 percent beginning July 1.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. Suppose we change that and make it retroactive to January 1, what happens?

Mr. WOODRUM. That could not be done in this bill. That would be a change in the substantive law which would have to be done by a separate bill.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Can you give an estimate for the yearly expenditure that would be abolished if the soldiers' bonus were paid in full at once?

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot; but obviously it would be simply the clerical service necessary to keep the books, and I think it would be infinitesimal.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is in that item of 3 percent-plus that you gave previously?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated a little while ago that the appropriation for the coming year was $159,000,000 more than for the present year. Does the gentleman mean that that $159,000,000 will be an increase in the expense of the Veterans' Administration in 1936 over 1935?

Mr. WOODRUM. I did not say in the Veterans' Administration; I said the whole bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. The veterans' item is $158,000,000 more, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. That does not mean that the cost of the Veterans' Administration in 1936 will be $158,000,000 more than in 1935?

Mr. WOODRUM. No.

Mr. BOILEAU. Ninety-eight million dollars over what they received in 1935, over the official estimate for 1935?

Mr. WOODRUM. Brought about largely because of added benefits incident to the passing of the bill over the President's veto.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is that for the year 1935–36?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is for part of 1935 and 1936.

Mr. BOILEAU. But that probably would represent the additional cost for the balance of the year 1935.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. The $98,000,000 was what it cost in 1935.

Mr. BOILEAU. Ninety-eight million dollars more.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. That brought the 1935 appropriation of $296,000,000 plus up to $394,000,000 plus.

Mr. BOILEAU. If in 1935 it cost $98,000,000 more, how much more will it cost in 1936 than it did in 1935?

Mr. WOODRUM. It will cost the difference between $296,000,000 and $400,700,000. Some of it is brought about by the widows and orphans' pension bill, and part of it is made necessary because of certain changes the President has made in the regulations. About $100,000,000 is what the Veterans' Administration estimates the increase to be.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that it is not fair to charge the increase entirely to the action of Congress in overriding the Presidential veto? Did not the President at the time intimate that it was his intention to make substantial changes in the regulations?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think so; yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. So that the actual cost to the Government because of its action in overriding the President's veto is nowhere near $98,000,000 a year.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is substantially less than that, I think.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Under the heading of "Civil-service retirement fund", I see $40,000,000 appropriated as a credit. Will the gentleman be so kind as to tell the House the annual contribution made by the Government and by the employees of the Government?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is my understanding that the contribution is made on an equal basis by both the Government and the employees of the Government, that each contribute 3½ percent of the pay roll.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It does not cost the Government more than $40,000,000 annually?

Mr. WOODRUM. It costs the Government a little more than that. We are behind. It will take about $52,000,000 to pay the Government's share of that.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And it will take a contribution of substantially the same amount on the part of the employees?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. What was the purpose of transferring this item from the Veterans' Administration to the civil-service item?

Mr. WOODRUM. Because it was thought more logical to have it in the Civil Service Commission than in the Veterans' Administration. It is simply an administrative change.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, can the gentleman tell us the total sum of money that has been deposited from year to year for the retirement of the adjusted-service certificates, including the $50,000,000 carried by this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not have those figures.

Mr. MAY. Has the gentleman an approximate idea of the amount?

Mr. WOODRUM. I can give the figures to the gentleman; it is $1,296,000,000.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER. Included in the item for Foreign Service is an appropriation to take care of the depreciation of the currency, is there not?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is this due to the lessened gold content of the dollar?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is one way of stating it.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am wondering if this is consistent with the attitude of the Attorney General before the Supreme Court in the last day or two.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman from Virginia would not like to pass upon the consistency of the opinions of the Attorney General.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is it not the opposite position from that he is taking before the Supreme Court?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman from Kansas to form his own conclusions in the matter.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the item "Civil-service retirement disability" include only the civil-service employees in the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. WOODRUM. No. The administration of the civil-service retirement fund, which is a fund to provide for the retirement of the general civil-service employees of the Government, was for a time in the Department of the Interior. When the old Pension Bureau of the Department of the Interior was consolidated with the Veterans' Administration they sent the civil-service retirement section to the Veterans' Administration, but by administrative order it was transferred to the Civil Service Commission, where, obviously, it was more properly and agreeably situated.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will this amount be deducted, then?

Mr. WOODRUM. Nothing is carried in the veterans' appropriation for 1936 for it. It is in this bill under the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to reciprocate the sentiments which the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee has been good enough to express. I want to pay my respects to the majority members of this committee. It is always a pleasure to work with them; and I am sure, after listening to the able presentation by the chairman [Mr. WOODRUM], the Members of the House will agree with me that it is indeed fortunate in having such an able and distinguished chairman of this subcommittee. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to speak at length today. In view of what has been said about the bill, in view of the fact also that there is very little of a contentious nature in the bill insofar as the committee is concerned, no extended presentation on my part is essential, I am sure.

The bill, as a whole, as has been pointed out, carries a total appropriation of approximately $777,000,000 ($776,916,706), or roughly $160,000,000 ($159,693,674) more than carried by the same bill a year ago. There are increases reported in most of the items in the bill. In four instances I think there are apparent reductions, but those reductions are more apparent than real. As the chairman has pointed out, of the total increase of approximately $160,000,000, about $24,000,000 ($24,166,130) is accounted for by the restoration of compensation to the extent of 5 percent which is carried by the bill, while about $118,000,000 ($117,897,904) is to be found in the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration, which includes an increase of $50,000,000 in the contribution to the adjusted-service certificate fund in order to bring that fund more nearly to the point it should be on an actuarial basis.

This bill, I think, is always an interesting one. It has the added interest this year of three new organizations which are covered by its terms. One of the new organizations is the reorganized National Mediation Board, set up for the purpose of ironing out disputes and maintaining harmony within the field covered by the Railway Labor Act. In the new organization provided for in June 1934, the functions of the old Board of Mediation were retained, including provision for mediation, for arbitration, and for settlement of disputes, if necessary, through emergency boards designated by the President. In addition there is an added function provided for through the so-called "National Railroad Adjustment Board." The functions of this Board are primarily to take care of cases involving the interpretation and application of agreements in this general field which have been concluded. The Adjustment Board consists of 36 members, 18 designated by the carriers and 18 by workers' organizations. Its headquarters is in Chicago. It operates through four divisions. It contemplates a working force of about 55 and asks for an appropriation of $156,000.

I have always believed that the former Board of Mediation did excellent work under the leadership, as many Members of this House know, of a distinguished citizen of Massachusetts, a former Member of this House, Hon. Samuel Winslow. The new organization gives promise, if we are to accept the testimony before our committee, of doing even better work in this field, and I am sure we all share in the hope that this will prove to be the case, realizing the important part which it is designed to play in the railway field, responsible for the well-being of something over a million and a half workers.

The other new items have already been referred to by the chairman of the subcommittee, namely, the Federal Communications Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission. The Federal Communications Commission contemplates an organization of 408 workers at home and 111 in the field, and asks for an appropriation of $1,500,000. The personnel requested and the appropriation requested are both about 150 percent in excess of that required by the old Federal Radio Commission, with its work in the radio field as distinguished from the functions imposed on the new Commission.

Should the Commission actually go into the matter of valuation of the utilities under its control, the evidence indicates that an even larger appropriation would be requested.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has been accorded tremendous powers as pointed out by the chairman. The able statement of its chairman, Mr. Kennedy, before the committee affords striking evidence of this fact. I sincerely hope that this Commission in the exercise of its powers will proceed with moderation in order that the country may derive the maximum benefit from its regulation and not be handicapped by ill-advised or excessive regulation.

Two or three of the older units may perhaps be referred to, for example, the Employees' Compensation Commission. The evidence before the committee shows a tremendous increase in the work of this Commission. The number of injuries reported annually to the Commission under normal conditions amounted to something like 24,000. Last year there were reports of injuries from the Civil Works Administration alone amounting to 163,000 and from the C. C. C. amounting to 10,000. The reports from other sources also increased to well over 29,000. It is obvious, I think, from the testimony presented, that an increase in funds for the Employees' Compensation Commission is essential.

The Federal Trade Commission has turned over a portion of its former duties to the new Securities and Exchange Commission, about 118 of its personnel, and something over $260,000 of its appropriation.

The work of the Commission has increased in respect to investigations made for the National Recovery Administration. The Commission has made 270 investigations with a view to the enforcement of codes under the N. R. A., and has also done similar work to a lesser degree for the A. A. A.

The Tariff Commission has also had increased duties imposed upon it. Some 10 investigations have been made under the N. R. A. with a view to the control of imports. An immense amount of work has also resulted under the policy of reciprocal trade agreements. Some 31 separate committees have been set up in connection with this work, and it is estimated that $426,753 out of its total appropriation of $955,000 will be needed for the work.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know how many trade agreements have been made with other countries?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The only agreement actually concluded to date is the agreement made sometime ago with the Government of Cuba. There are a number of other negotiations in view, the exact status of which I am not in a position to state.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think there are some 15 under consideration at the present time and there is great agitation among the industries which have been or which may be hurt by the elimination of tariff protection.

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman will permit, the agreement he speaks of with Cuba is principally with respect to sugar, is it not?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is the principal item, I think.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It has affected the cotton and cotton-textile industries adversely.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am not going to talk any further about the Veterans' Administration. This is something which is always of great interest to all of us here in the House, but the appropriation has been so admirably explained by the gentleman from Virginia that I am not going to take the time to say anything further about it. I simply want to emphasize that this appropriation puts into effect the liberalization of regulations previously in force as a result of the action taken by both Houses of Congress at the last session.

I want to emphasize also the fact that there is carried in this bill the sum of $925,000 for increased hospitalization facilities. This is a particularly important matter or becoming so with reference to the neuropsychiatric cases. The evidence before the committee indicates that there are today some 21,000 of these unfortunate cases and that we may expect ultimately to have as many as 40,000 of them, while there are available at present no more than 189 free beds to take care of this type of case.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Can the gentleman tell us how the hospitals are divided up at this time as between these cases and other kinds of cases and what part of the hospitals is being used at this time to take care of the C. C. C. cases?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I thought I had that information here in chart form.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman put that in the RECORD, please?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. McFARLANE. And show the vacancies in the different hospitals, so that we can get some idea of the kind and character of hospitalization we are having in the country in order that we may answer the inquiries of our constituents along this line.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I shall be glad to do so.

[1] As of Nov. 30, 1934, there were 475 C. C. C. patients in various veterans' hospitals. There were also on that date about 3,500 vacant hospital beds, of which 189 were available for neuropsychiatric cases.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to talk at length. I am going to make just one or two observations of a general character before concluding what I have to say.

I call the attention of the members of the committee, in the first instance, to the evidence brought before this committee by the General Accounting Office. The evidence submitted by that organization indicates that its work had been more than doubled in view of the recent expansion of Government activities. For example, whereas in normal times a total number of about 31,000,000 checks was handled annually by this agency, in the fiscal year 1934 there were no less than 100,000,000 checks which the office was called upon to handle.

The evidence also indicates that the Accounting Office does not have at this time facilities deemed adequate for carrying out the responsibilities which should be properly intrusted to it. The statement was made that if these facilities were available, an additional $100,000 would be requested in order to carry out the proper functions of the office.

The evidence also indicates that while progress has been made in bringing the emergency organizations under the General Accounting Office for audit, there are still some 25 units which do not submit at this time to audit by the General Accounting Office.

I am in favor of giving the General Accounting Office the facilities it requires and all the funds it needs to do a 100-percent job.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman insert in the RECORD the 25 agencies referred to?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I will.

LIST OF ACTIVITIES WHICH DO NOT SUBMIT ACCOUNTS TO GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE FOR AUDIT

Agricultural credit corporations (under F. C. A.).
Alien Property Custodian.
Clerks of courts (Justice).
Central banks for cooperatives (F. C. A.).
Corporation of foreign security holders.
Comptroller of Currency (assessments and insolvent, etc., banks).
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.
Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation (F. C. A.).
Federal savings and loan associations.
Federal Reserve Board.
Gorgas Memorial Institute (field audit).
Home Owners' Loan Corporation (offers to account).
Hospitals of various services.
Inland Waterways Corporation.
Insular governments' funds in Treasury, except Virgin Islands.
Merchant Fleet Corporation (local audit).
Panama Railway Co.
Panama Steamship Co.
Perry's Victory Memorial Commission (collections).
Reconstruction Finance Corporation.
Smithsonian Institution (funds, etc.).
Soldiers' Home funds.
Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.
Various special deposits.
Virgin Islands (partial).

I am in favor of doing everything possible to bring each and every Government unit under the jurisdiction of the General Accounting Office. I think this is a protection for any administration. I think it is due the people of the United States.

Someone this morning called my attention to the Budget message delivered to this Congress a year ago, and I quote one section of that message, as follows:

> Up to now there has been no coordinated control over emergency expenditures. Today, by Executive order, I have imposed that necessary control in the Bureau of the Budget.
> Heretofore emergency expenditures have not been subject to audit by the Comptroller General of the General Accounting Office. Today I am, by Executive order, reposing in him the authority to conduct such an audit and to continue to audit each such expenditure. Hereafter, therefore, just as in the departmental expenditures, there will be, in emergency expenditures, a pre-Budget and a post-audit.
> By reason of the fact that the Bureau of the Budget has had no control in the past over the various expenditures, obligations, and allotments made by the emergency organizations, the task of preparing the present Budget has been the most difficult one since the Budget and Accounting Act went into effect in 1921. These difficulties in future years will be substantially minimized by the control which I have established.

The Executive order referred to was revoked a day or two later.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have no comment to make except to say that I am in hearty accord with the purpose manifested in this statement by the President to this Congress a year ago in submitting his annual Budget message. I hope that steps will be taken as promptly as possible to assure a pre-Budget and a post-audit for every Government activity in the future.

I might go one step farther. The bill which we have under consideration covers some 20 so-called "independent establishments." Of course, it does not cover them all. If the Members of the House will examine the Budget and that section of the Budget which refers to the independent establishments of the Government, they will find some 30 additional establishments which have been financed during the past fiscal year and which are not at this time requesting any appropriation. If they continue to function they must obtain in some way further funds in the future.

The number includes independent agencies with a personnel running into the thousands, with an annual expenditure running into the hundreds of millions, which have been financed either out of lump-sum appropriations or other allocations or through the permission of Congress to finance themselves through the use of the public credit. In respect to these organizations, Congress, as I see it, has largely deprived itself of the power of appropriation and the power of control.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman put in his remarks a list of these 30 organizations and the amount they have been spending? It is my belief that we ought to begin to look after these departments.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I will try to insert a comprehensive table along that line, either with my remarks or subsequently.

We had some debate on the floor yesterday with respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. That is an example of the organizations of which I am speaking. That organization had on its pay roll for the present fiscal year over 17,000 employees, with an expenditure for salaries of over $36,000,000.

The Corporation has reported its expenditures to the Budget Bureau this year. That information is available to the Members of the House. I am not criticizing the expenditures, I am merely saying that I know of no control which Congress has over current expenditure by this or similar organizations unless it be by resort to indirect methods, such as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] yesterday.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. With reference to the expenditure for the personnel of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, does not that money come back to the Government? In other words, when an application is under consideration certain fees are charged and in the interest charge there is a percent applied to expenses. Therefore, the overhead all comes back to the Government?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the gentleman is in a measure correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman did not leave that impression—he left the impression that the money came entirely out of the Treasury of the United States. I want the RECORD to show this money is not a charge on the taxpayers.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Congress authorized the Corporation to be set up, it authorized the Treasury to subscribe to its capital stock to the extent of $200,000,000; it authorized the Corporation to issue its bonds to the extent of $3,000,000,000; it authorized the guaranty by the Treasury of both principal and interest of these bonds. Then it authorized the Corporation to employ such personnel and pay such salaries as it should see fit. I simply make the point that to that extent Congress has deprived itself of any direct power to regulate the current expenditure of the organization.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the law does provide that the Corporation can charge a certain interest, and the intent of Congress, as I understand it, was that that interest would be sufficient to pay the overhead. Is that correct?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The intent of Congress is one thing, the control by Congress is another.

Mr. COCHRAN. I realize that. The question of the control of the salaries paid, and so forth, might not be in the hands of Congress, but nevertheless the Congress, in the bill for which the gentleman voted, I think, and for which I voted and tried to amend time and time again but was defeated by the Republican side of the House, provided that the interest charged should cover the overhead expenses of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. In other words, in the end it would be of no expense to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to answer the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not true that the bonds of the Corporation are being sold, paying less than 3 percent, while the mortgages given pay around 5 percent, and the difference between the two is really to pay for the cost of the administration act?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not talking about the interest on the bonds. I am talking about the interest on the loans. There is a difference between the interest on the bonds and the interest on the loans. It is the interest on the loans that absorbs all overhead expenses of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and we should not let the RECORD indicate that the people of the United States generally as taxpayers are paying the personnel of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. DONDERO. It is the people who use the Home Owners' Loan Corporation who are really paying for the administration of the act. Those who do not use it do not pay for it.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is what I say.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If my recollection is correct, there was no general opposition by Republicans to the legislation referred to. On the contrary, it was widely supported by them. Whether or not the taxpayers generally meet the expenses of administration depends on collections of principal and interest by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation from its borrowers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The contention and the attitude of the Board is that since Congress has created it and provided it with several hundred million dollars of capital stock and authorized $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds that are guaranteed by the Government, both as to principal and interest, that it not only does not appreciate any suggestion from Congress but it is not going to tolerate any suggestion. The contention is that it is going to handle its own business and provide its own regulations; that it is going to provide its own salary, and it wants Congress to let it alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes more. I do not want to leave the impression that I am singling out any institution in this connection. I appreciate fully what the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has meant to those in need throughout the Nation. I am raising a broad question of principle. For my part I believe that, insofar as is humanly possible, every governmental organization which is expending public funds should be subject to the Budget, should be subject to the Comptroller General, should be subject to the appropriating bodies of both Houses of this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Committee to the evidence submitted by the Civil Service Commission. That evidence indicates that there are on the pay rolls of the Government no less than 220,000 workers who are entirely exempt from civil-service requirements. It indicates also a tremendous turn-over of personnel from month to month. It indicates an increase in retirements during the past year to the extent of more than 100 percent. It indicates that about half of these retirements have been made under the involuntary 30-year retirement provision which, incidentally, this bill seeks to continue in effect for another 12 months. All of us are familiar with the so-called "McKellar amendment" affecting some 1,260 workers on the civil-service rolls and with other examples where inroads have been recently made into the civil service. In my judgment the picture presented by the evidence to which I refer is one which deserves the most thorough-going investigation. The people of the country are entitled to an explanation. Inefficiency, waste, and an increased burden for the taxpayers of the country are the inevitable results of recent tendencies.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Gladly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I notice there is an appropriation for an additional alcohol tax unit examination. Is not that the examination that was held as the result of the McKellar amendment?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I assume that it is.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And that, of course, is a large unnecessary expense to the taxpayers. I understand the Department is going to request that the McKellar amendment be repealed, because it is so unjust to the men in the alcoholic tax unit, who had already taken one civil-service examination and passed it and were employed. It has caused great hardship. They were simply ejected from the civil service, with all protection taken away which civil service gives to the employees. I agree with my distinguished colleague in his approval of the civil-service or merit system.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I hope that my colleague's understanding will prove to be a fact. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter from Mr. Henry H. Curran, director of the National Economy League, and my reply thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

WE SHOULD PAY THE BALANCE DUE ON THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES IN CASH NOW

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, as a good Democrat well said in the 1928 campaign, "Just to keep the record straight", I want to refer to the record made in the last Congress regarding our efforts to pay the balance due on the adjusted-service certificates.

The Patman bill was introduced on the first day of the special sesion, March 9, 1933. The committee failed to act on it, and on April 27, 1933, Mr. LUNDEEN, of Minnesota, filed a petition to discharge the committee. We who favored that legislation worked to secure the necessary signatures to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from the further consideration of the bill in order to bring it before the House for a vote.

Finally, a year and three days later, we secured a vote on that piece of legislation. This House will recall that we worked hard to try to bring that legislation before Congress for consideration all during that time. The signers of the discharge petition will be found on page 2938 of the RECORD of last session of Congress. I was the first one from my State to sign that petition. We who have favored that legislation have been rather severely criticized by certain lines of thought, for expressing here and elsewhere our candid opinion regarding the benefits that would be derived from this legislation. Apparently every effort has been made to keep this legislation from coming before the Congress, and I think the repeal of the 145 signers to a petition, known as the discharge rule, was a step backward.

ADOPTING GAG RULE A BACKWARD STEP

The House went on record the first day of this session and repealed the rule that permitted this legislation to come before the last Congress. I am referring to the discharge rule, where 145 Members were required to sign a petition which would permit legislation to come before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague from Texas will remember that that bill was passed here in the House when amendments were offered from every direction, and that the friends of that bill did not permit a single amendment to be put on it. With that sentiment here in the House, my friend need not be uneasy at all about getting 218 signers to a petition to bring that bill out whenever the time comes for us to pass it. We will get the required number of signatures to bring it up in the House and plenty of votes to pass it.

Mr. McFARLANE. I hope the gentleman is correct about that, but daily we are reading in the newspapers statements emanating from certain sources, which I am afraid will make some of the boys a little bit weak about signing on the dotted line.

A look at the record will indicate that there are quite a few of the bandwagon boys who signed the last day the bill was before Congress for signing. We had about 100 signatures on that petition for 6 months. Those last names were hard to get; yet when the bill came before Congress, there were 313 Members of this House, including most of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, who voted to discharge their own committee from consideration of that bill. Yet they would not vote it out of their committee. The vote at page 2938 of the RECORD was 313 against 104 to discharge the committee. Then when the bill was finally voted on, the House voted 295 to 125 to finally pass the bill. See page 4336 of the RECORD of last session.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. To keep the record straight, the author of that bill, House bill No. 1, Mr. PATMAN himself, did not sign it until the last day?

Mr. McFARLANE. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. He did not sign it before, because he was waiting for an opportune time to take it up and pass it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Well, I do not know about that. The gentleman may explain that in his own time, if he feels it is necessary. I am not critical of the gentleman. I am speaking of the fight that we made to finally get that bill before Congress.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I desire to insert in the RECORD a copy of a letter I received from the National Economy League and my reply thereto.

The letters referred to are as follows:

THE NATIONAL ECONOMY LEAGUE,
New York, N. Y., December 15, 1934.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,
Graham, Tex.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MCFARLANE: With great respect I write to ask the nature of the impression that would be made upon you if the holders of the $28,000,000,000 worth of United States Government bonds now outstanding should demand that you make a law requiring our Government to pay off the whole $28,000,000,000 right away, although most of it is not due for many years to come. Would this impress you as a fair demand? If financially possible, would it be a wise and trustworthy protection of the interests of the whole American people whom you represent in the Congress?

If so, would you think well of trying to raise the whole $28,000,000,000 at once by taxation, or trying to borrow it from somebody else, or avoiding both of these disagreeable endeavors by running the whole sum off the printing press in new additional money? You would have in mind that such a demand for immediate payment, if made upon you, would represent the insistence of thousands and thousands of little American depositors—all of them American voters—in the American banks which hold the bulk of the bonds.

I think I understand the impatience with which you have read this letter thus far.

But is there any difference, save in degree, between such a demand and the demand of some of the veterans of the last war that you pay off to them right away the bonus that is not due until 1945, 10 years away? What is the nature of the impression that this bonus demand makes upon you?

Now, the demand for immediate payment of the national debt is, thank Heaven, not likely to be made, but the bonus demand has been made and will be made again the moment the Seventy-fourth Congress, of which you are a Member, convenes 3 weeks hence. Immediate payment of this bonus, which was accepted by the veterans as an obligation due in 1945, and not in 1935, will cost the rest of the American people well over $2,000,000,000. Will you take this out of us in taxes all at once, or try to borrow it from somebody else, or run it off the printing press in inflated money?

I think I understand the impatience with which you may look upon this bonus demand; and you and I both understand the impatience with which our hard-pressed American people will look upon the idea of paying a bonus to a favored few 10 years before it is due to them.

After all, how many of these 3,500,000 veterans ever got hurt in the war at all? Most of them are in perfect health today, and better off than any other class of Americans, yet already they get more relief than anybody else.

And now a $2,000,000,000 bonus besides, to be paid right away—anything else?

Wishing you a very Merry Christmas, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

HENRY H. CURRAN, Director.

---

GRAHAM, TEX., December 19, 1934.

Mr. HENRY H. CURRAN,
Director the National Economy League,
280 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. CURRAN: I have your letter of December 15, in which you sarcastically take to task those advocating payment due the soldiers on the adjusted-service certificate. If you will bear with me as I did with you in reading your letter, I will briefly state some of the reasons why the friends of the ex-service man cannot understand your attitude and those of your "paymaster."

Payment of the balance due on the adjusted-service certificate, as provided under the Patman bill, is common justice. The railroads, munition makers, clothing manufacturers, and all other Government contractors, during the war, received their bonuses through Government subsidy in cash immediately after the close of the World War, even to the extent of paying a bonus on contracts whether fulfilled or not. These racketeers, and their agents, many of whom are represented on your letterhead, took out of the Treasury in cash more than $4,000,000,000, and now through the lobbying activities of those backing your drive, through a campaign of lies, vilifications, and abuses, are trying to stop the payment of the balance due on the adjusted-service certificate due to the man who "bared his breast to the enemy and held the line" while the blood-sucking profiteers became multi-millionaires as a result of their efforts.

According to the peculiar line of thought that you represent, this was common justice to the wealth of the country to be paid promptly in cash, pouring bonuses on unearned contracts, providing unreasonable profits, and you and your kind have done your best to deny the ex-service man an adjustment in his pay of $1 per day, for honest, faithful service rendered for fighting on foreign soil or wherever necessary, and the soldier had no say in saying where he would fight; he was drafted and subject to the call of his country.

Recent disclosures have shown tremendous profits made by the Munitions Trust; similar investigations would show the tremendous profits made by every other line of big business carried on during the war, when more than 33,000 were made millionaires off the blood of the land, the same crowd you represent.

We were told in the last war that we were fighting a war to end wars, that democracy would not perish from the earth. We found upon examination, the concentration of wealth into the hands of about 150 families in the Teutonic powers was largely responsible for the last war. We returned home to find that the wealth of our country was concentrated into the hands of less than 100 families, and unless and until we can redistribute this wealth into the hands of the people and restore buying power, it is very evident that it will be a slow battle to reemploy our people.

You ask if it would be right to pay off the outstanding $28,000,000,000 in Government bonds through the issuance of new money? I ask, How, under the present set-up, are the present overburdened taxpayers going to pay the more than $800,000,000-a-year interest these coupon clippers are collecting on Government bonds? Yes, I think all of these Government bonds should be paid off on maturity through the issuance of new money, and that proper legislation be enacted to stop the issuance of any more tax-exempt bonds. It is unfair and unpatriotic that the wealthy of the Nation should thus escape paying their just part of our tax burden, and at the same time freeze credit and increase the cycle of unemployment. The Patman bill will not require new, additional taxes for payment; it will provide a needed medium of exchange, fairly and equally distributed throughout the Nation, placing it in the hands of the people. This will restore buying power at the grass roots where it is so badly needed and will start the wheels of commerce and industry and reemployment moving such as no other measure will do that Congress could enact.

Today we find that about 5 percent of our people own more than 90 percent of our wealth; that the 95 percent who own 10 percent of the wealth are paying more than 50 percent of the expenses of running the Government—National, State, county, city, and school. This unfair and unequal tax burden is becoming too heavy, and a more equitable distribution of the load should be made. I favor such a distribution.

In conclusion, in answer to your last paragraph:

"After all, how many of these 3,500,000 veterans ever got hurt in the war at all? Most of them are in perfect health today, and better off than any other class of Americans; yet already they get more relief any anybody else."

Let me ask you how many of the thirty-three odd thousands of multi-millionaires, to say nothing of the hundreds of thousands made rich during the war, faced anything more than talcum powder. Did any of them get hurt? Most of them still have their ill-gotten gains; in trying times such as these they should be made to carry their part of the tax burden.

Very truly,

W. D. MCFARLANE.

THE SENTIMENT OF THE PEOPLE FAVORS IMMEDIATE PAYMENT

Since the last Congress we have had an election. The sentiment of the people, Nation-wide, has been expressed. I dare say there is not a new Member on this floor who does not come here favoring payment of the bonus. If there is, I pause to allow him to hold up his hand—some new Member who comes here who is opposed to the payment of the bonus. I see no hand.

Another body at this same time had an election and, according to newspaper dispatches, we find that every new Member of that body comes here favoring the payment of the bonus. Of course, we only know what we read in the newspapers, as the saying goes. I mention that to illustrate the wishes of the people of the country who have spoken on this question.

WE NEED MORE BUYING POWER

I know and you know that we need in our country as we have never needed it before, more buying power. Our great leader in the White House, the President of the United States, in his message, has indicated that and has provided for the expenditure of more money, to put money into the hands of the people to increase the buying power, and to reemploy our people. That is right, and we favor that. People must live. I know and you know that credit has dried up; that it is needed today as it has never been needed before. The payment of the bonus now, in cash, in new money that the big bankers cannot control, will give us new and added buying power fairly and equally distributed, Nationwide, where it will do the most good. In my district it will put more than $5,000,000 into the hands of those veterans and their dependents. It will do the same thing for your district. That is money that is badly needed.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The difficulty with the payment of the bonus, in the estimation of many of the Members of the House, is the question of the payment of the bonus. I wish the gentleman would pause for a moment, without passing over that phase of it, to explain just how we will finance the payment of the bonus.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman, I would say that we are now borrowing from big bankers about $112,000,000 a year and will do so until 1945. We will borrow from them and be paying interest out of the Public Treasury more than one-half the amount it will require to pay the balance due on the certificates. In addition to that, you saw from the chart which we just had before us when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was addressing us, where it is costing annually more than $59,000,000 to take care of the salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration. By many it has been carefully estimated that more than $500,000 is expended annually by this department in administration expense of this section of the Veterans' Administration for these adjusted-service certificates alone.

A few days ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] said on the floor of the House that we are daily printing more than 4 tons of new paper money to give to the bankers of the country, and it is not considered inflation; that is sound money—and that is true. I ask, Mr. Chairman, if our Bureau of Printing and Engraving can print this money for the bankers with the credit of the Government of the United States back of it, why cannot the same plant print new money under H. R. 1 and pay this debt that this Government in 1925 recognized they owed these veterans? Why can they not use this same service to pay this debt and at the same time save this tremendous overhead and expense? Such payment can be made without a bond issue, without any increase in taxes, without any increase in interest, without increasing the size of the Budget, and without increasing the national debt.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The money the gentleman is talking about is supported, as I understand it, by a metallic base and a proper proportion of gold bonds.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is true of the money we will print under the Patman bill providing for full payment of the balance due on the adjusted-service certificates, for there is more than enough gold reserve in the Treasury today to take care of the issuance of in excess of $8,000,000,000 of new currency. And the money issued under the Patman bill will be just as sound as any of our currency now in circulation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman stated that his purpose in rising was to "keep the record straight."

Mr. McFARLANE. That is what I am trying to do; yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman think he is keeping the record straight when he implies that the only issue in the last campaign was the payment of the bonus certificates? His statement so indicated.

Mr. McFARLANE. Not at all. I am referring to the record made in the last Congress regarding payment of the bonus and the record made last year when the payment of the bonus was made an issue in any congressional campaign.

Mr. COCHRAN. The real issue in the last campaign was support the President and complete the recovery program, was it not?

Mr. McFARLANE. That may have been the issue in the district of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. It was the issue in my district, and it was the outstanding issue all over the United States.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to state that his district would receive $5,000,000 if the bonus were paid, as he advocates.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What sum, as an average, would each soldier get out of the bonus?

Mr. McFARLANE. It would be about $500 each.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that this was an issue in my district, and I came here with a majority of 31,000. I am going to vote with the gentleman for the bonus.

ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES LONG PAST DUE

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, there are those who contend that the balance due on the adjusted-service certificates is not yet due; but when we consider the fact that it was 7 years before Congress recognized this as a just debt and one that should be paid, and the further fact that in providing for the payment, not of what the veteran wanted but only what he could get, they overlooked including interest covering these 7 years, although they include interest on all income-tax refunds, depreciation allowances, and so forth, from date return filed, regardless of date claim was filed. If we give the veteran the same rights as given these large income-tax payers, who have received more than $4,000,000,000 in tax refunds under Mr. Mellon's regime, these considerations would make the adjusted-service certificates due, I believe, October 1, 1931, or some date near that time. So the certificates are more than past due. They ought to be paid. They constitute a just obligation of the Government, and now is the time they should be paid, a time when we need buying power most.

RESTORE BUYING POWER—REEMPLOY OUR PEOPLE

Now is the time when the payment of this money will help reemploy our people and start the wheels of commerce and industry driving in the right direction. It will give an impetus in this direction greater than any other piece of legislation we could enact at this time. I trust that the Ways and Means Committee will give early consideration to this legislation and will report it to the House, so we can vote upon it and send it to the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose we do cash their certificates before they are due and allow the interest prematurely—would they be getting any more than was due them?

Mr. McFARLANE. Not at all; and they are a class of people who can be depended upon to defend our flag under all conditions.

Mr. BLANTON. And when we pay them their certificates, they will not be getting any too much, so all this talk about paying them prematurely is making much ado about nothing.

Mr. McFARLANE. They will not be getting enough when compared with what big business has received. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I had expected to touch upon a number of issues this afternoon, but I just read in the committee report the statement that $426,000 will be needed for reciprocal trade agreement work in 1936. I confess I am a protective Republican and that I believe in tariff protection, particularly for the American wage earners, in order that they may have a job at the American standard of wages and of living to which they are entitled and accustomed to in the past.

I opposed giving to the President the right to tamper and bargain with the tariff, as revenue legislation belongs to Congress. But at that time I made the statement that I looked with favor upon reciprocal trade agreements between the United States and South and Central American countries, because they are our natural markets and there lies our geographical and logical trade expansion. We ought to do everything we can to promote trade between South and Central American countries and the United States, between this country and the entire American hemisphere along the same lines as was done by Great Britain at the Ottawa Imperial Conference. I am willing to make any reasonable concessions to promote our trade with Latin American countries. These reciprocity treaties are now being negotiated. I expect that considerable goodwill come out of these bargaining treaties between South America and our own country, and I am willing to give a great deal of credit to Assistant Secretary of State Sumner Welles for his sincerity and his desire to promote our trade relations with South and Central American countries, and particularly with Cuba where he was our Ambassador and rendered distinguished service.

I make this statement as a premise to what I am going to say now, because I find that the only trade treaty that has finally been consummated—the one with Cuba—has failed to provide adequate protection for our textile exports to Cuba, our second largest textile export market. Unless we secure the cooperation of the Cuban Government, we will lose practically all of our textile exports there to competition from Japan, a country that buys almost nothing in return from Cuba.

I want the Members from the South to follow me just as much as I should like to have the attention of those from the industrial North and East.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. May I say that I am sympathetic with the gentleman in his efforts because we realize that our hope is in the South American trade, and two of the things necessary to stimulate this trade are cooperation in the building of a canal, which is sponsored by one of the Members from Massachusetts, across Mexico and a canal across my own State. We are willing to go with the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I cannot agree with the gentleman on the advisibility of building a canal in Mexico. I want the gentleman to go along with me on the textile matter. I believe if we are going to have money to spend, let us spend it in the United States and not in any foreign land. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Florida is a part of the United States, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. FISH. And a good part too—but not Mexico.

Now, what has happened? The textile industry is the second largest in the United States. It employs some 430,000 men; and, in connection with the textile industry, of course, you have the cotton fields of the South. Since this administration came into power, a new economic factor has arisen in the world, one which the free traders did not have to consider 2 or 3 years ago. That is industrialized Japan, with a labor scale of 20 cents a day, and where the cost of living is 5 or 6 cents a day. They have industrialized their textile mills. They have efficient, up-to-date, modern mills with the best possible machinery, operated by skilled labor, equipped for mass production, and are today flooding the markets of the world.

Japanese textile products are destroying our textile export trade and bringing ruin and unemployment to our textile industry, and more particularly to the export branch of it, which takes care of the surplus and is largely responsible for making it profitable.

Up to this time the Philippines has been our greatest market for our textile goods. A year or so ago we did about 75 percent of all the textile business there. Japan has succeeded within the last year, with its mass production and cheap-labor costs, in driving us out and wrecking our exports. Japan is now doing about 75 percent, and we are rapidly losing this market.

I shall speak on the Philippine situation at length at a future date and state the reasons for this deplorable development and make clear who is to blame unless immediate steps are taken to afford adequate protection to our own textile industry. I do not believe that this great industry will permit itself to be sacrificed on the altar of free trade to promote Japanese interests and employment. Other nations, including Great Britain, are protecting their textile exports against Japanese competition, and the United States must do likewise.

The same thing has happened in Cuba since this trade treaty went into effect. Our textile exports have dwindled steadily away and unless Cuba and other South American countries with which we consummate these trade agreements act in order to protect our textile industry we will lose all these natural markets. Not so long ago our textile exports amounted to $100,000,000 a year. It has now dwindled down to possibly $10,000,000 a year, and we will lose all of that unless speedy action is taken to protect our textile exports to South and Central American countries from ruinous competition from the new economic Japanese menace.

I do not question the sincerity of the State Department. We have at the head of the State Department a very distinguished and able man, a former Member of this House, but an out-and-out free-trader. He has under him a number of visionaries who believe in breaking down economic barriers throughout the world. The nations of the world have gone mad on nationalism and protection, and we are standing alone against them. This great country of ours, built upon protection and the protective principle, is now saying to the rest of the world that we propose to break down all economic barriers between nations at a time when every other country is setting them up and trying to become self-contained. I am against every proposed trade treaty with European nations as being against the interests of American labor and destructive of American industry.

Unless something is done soon there will be 35,000 more unemployed in the textile industry within a short time and approximately an equal number in the cotton fields, on the railroads, and in connection with shipping and other industries affected, due to the loss of our legitimate and natural markets in the Philippines and Latin America. This great industry does not propose to be sacrificed to Japanese interests without a political fight that will be felt in every northern, eastern, and southern State and may end up by these States joining forces with the beet-sugar States of the West to kick these bargaining tariffs out of the window. They have as much reason to fight to preserve their export markets as the American farmer has. Let me say to the gentlemen from the South that Japan, which has been buying vast quantities of cotton in the past, is now buying 75 percent of its cotton from India and only 25 percent from the South, mixing the better cotton of the South with the poorer and cheaper cotton from India.

This is not a partisan matter. This is a matter affecting the second greatest industry in the country and the time has come to consider the situation and ascertain all the facts. It is time for the people of the industrial North and East, including such Southern States as Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, to join with the cotton States in demanding that the textile industry be protected, so that it may compete with Japan, particularly in the South and Central American countries and the Philippines. The Philippines was our greatest single market, Cuba our second, and then Colombia, and the rest of the South and Central American countries.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I had not proposed to speak on this question at the present time, but in view of the fact that this bill carries some $426,000 to consider these reciprocal trade treaties, I thought it was time that the facts be presented on a nonpartisan basis so that those who are interested from Southern, Northern, and Eastern States may combine and find out what actually can be done to protect their own interests and the welfare of the people living in their own congressional districts.

The gentleman who preceded me spoke on the bonus. I opposed the bonus in the last session of Congress on the ground it would take us off the gold standard and create inflation. We are already off the gold standard so that we do not have to bother about that.

The question is whether $2,200,000,000 will not cause inflation when you ask that it be paid through the printing-press method. For this reason I introduced yesterday a compromise measure, and I did so for the reason that we know very definitely, whether we like it or not, that the President proposes to veto the Patman measure or any similar measure, and it does not serve any good purpose or help the veterans or anyone else simply to put through legislation and have it vetoed, then have it sustained in the other body if it is not sustained in the House of Representatives.

The measure I presented provides that the adjusted-service certificates be paid in installments of 20 percent, beginning on July 1, 1935, and for a period of 5 years. The first installment may be paid and financed without any taxes, without any increase in the Budget, and without any inflation. We have paid to the veterans on loans and interest on those loans $1,700,000,000; $1,300,000,000 has already been paid through annual appropriations by the Congress into the sinking fund to pay the certificates. The $400,000,000 balance was taken out of the reserve fund of the veterans' life-insurance set-up, which was sufficient to provide for the loans up to 50 percent to the veterans and to take care of the interest payments. There is due to the veterans at the present time $1,700,000,000 without reference to interest payments.

My suggestion is that you take the $160,000,000 left in the Veterans' Administration and do away with the right of the veteran to borrow 50 percent. Ten percent of the veterans did not borrow this 50 percent, and if you take away that right as of July 1 of this year, there will be another $250,000,000 available. This $250,000,000, plus the $160,000,000 in cash, which is there, will finance the first installment without any necessity whatever of digging into the Treasury for any more money at the present time.

I am making this statement now because I honestly believe the only thing that can be done in this Congress for the veterans in need of relief in the way of a bonus will be a compromise and that a half loaf is better than no loaf at all.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have only 2 or 3 minutes and I would rather not.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] yesterday stated he thought the committee that investigated communism, Communist propaganda and activity, had accomplished very little and had wasted the Government's money, or words to that effect.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman has 2 more minutes. Will he now yield?

Mr. FISH. I have only 2 minutes and I cannot yield.

I would not care, so far as I am concerned, just what the individual view of the gentleman from Texas is about the usefulness of that committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is a good friend of mine, and I am making this statement because on that committee were two distinguished Democrats. There were only five members on the committee, and two were very able members of the Democratic Party, Judge Edward E. Eslick, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and Representative Robert S. Hall, who now holds an important position in the Federal Government. Out of respect to them and the other members of the committee, I want at least to state my view that no money was ever better spent and no committee of Congress has ever submitted a more comprehensive report and, I believe, ever returned as much money unspent as this committee did.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me to pay a compliment to his committee?

Mr. FISH. Out of the appropriation of $25,000 which was allotted to us by the House, we returned to the Treasury $6,000. We did not engage the services of a single lawyer. We made a report which evidently is approved by the country, because over 50,000 copies of the report have been bought by the public and another 50,000 have been issued by the Congress of the United States. For instance, the Associated Farmers of California, at San Francisco, have ordered within the week a reprint of the report for 5,000 copies at their own expense. Although the report was made 4 years ago, there is scarcely a day that goes by that some Member of Congress does not come to my office for a copy of House Report No. 2290 on Communist activities in the United States. It is still the most up-to-date document on Communist propaganda and activities. Its real value is educational, as it exposes the principles and aims of the Communists and suggests that the best way to combat the spread of communism is merely to expose its purposes and objectives to the American people, who still cherish their freedom.

Let me say further to the gentleman that he charged me with failing to put through the Congress the legislation which we recommended, but ever since our committee reported there has been a Democratic House of Representatives, and it was utterly out of the question for me to introduce, with any hope of success, any legislation that we recommended.

Judge Eslick and Representatives Hall and Jeffers did introduce measures to carry out the suggestions of the investigating committee, but the Democratic Congress failed to enact them into law. I would welcome the cooperation of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who has great energy and ability, in securing favorable action from his own party on any of the following recommendations made by our committee and signed by 2 Democrats and 2 Republicans, Edward E. Eslick, Robert S. Hall, Carl G. Bachmann, and myself, most of which have recently been endorsed by the following national organizations in resolutions to Congress: The American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, United States Chamber of Commerce, the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Merchants' Association of New York, and some of them by the American Federation of Labor and a host of other organizations.

RECOMMENDATIONS

(1) Enlarging the authority of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice for the purpose of investigating and keeping in constant touch with the revolutionary propaganda and activities of the Communists in the United States, and to provide for additional appropriations for skilled agents to devote their entire time to investigating and preparing reports on the personnel of all entities, groups, individuals, who teach or advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence.

(2) Strengthening immigration laws to prevent the admission of Communists into the United States, and providing for immediate deportation of all alien Communists.

(3) Provide for additional appropriations to the Bureau of Immigration for vigorous handling of deportation cases.

(4) Amend the naturalization laws so as to forbid the naturalization of a Communist.

(5) Amend the naturalization laws so as to cancel the naturalization certificate of a Communist.

(6) Deny reentry to the United States to an alien who has visited Russia to secure training in communistic doctrines.

(7) Amend post-office laws to declare nonmailable all newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, etc., published, written, or produced advocating revolutionary communism.

(8) Amend interstate commerce laws to prohibit transportation of newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, etc., advocating revolutionary communism.

(9) Enactment of Federal law to prosecute Communists or other persons, organizations, newspapers, etc., in the spreading of false rumors for the purpose of causing runs on banks.

(14) That the Communist Party of the United States of America, section of the Communist International, be declared illegal, or any other counterpart of the Communist Party advocating the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence, or affiliated with the Communist International at Moscow, be declared illegal; and that the executive authority of each State and the legislature thereof be informed of the revolutionary principles and objectives of the Communist Party of the United States of America, section of the Communist International, and be requested to take appropriate action to have said party excluded from or denied recognition as a political entity.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] a short while ago called your attention to the fact that a great deal of the debate in the Committee of the Whole has been devoted to the matter of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I am going to take advantage of the time allotted to me to say something on that subject, because I think it is very important that the Members of the Congress, who have had their constituents coming to them by the hundreds during the last year, should become awakened to the situation.

As a Member of the Seventy-second Congress, it was my privilege to speak and vote for the legislation which created the Federal home-loan bank. This institution was designed to prevent foreclosures by aiding distressed property owners through building and loan associations. Due to the collapse of the building-and-loan associations throughout the country and their failure to meet the requirements of the act, this legislation became inoperative in that it failed to meet the emergencies then existing.

The Seventy-third Congress passed legislation creating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, permitting the distressed home owner to save his home from foreclosure, providing he met the qualifications of the act. By this method of refinancing, the distressed home owner has secured long-term credit at a rate of interest not to exceed 5 percent.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was brought into existence because of the emergency confronting the Nation. Hundreds of thousands of our best citizens awoke one day to find themselves out of employment, in many cases their life savings wiped out, due to the manipulation of crooked bankers. In their straitened circumstances they were faced with the cruel process of foreclosure, which meant the destruction of equities in their homes, and the equities represented years of struggle and sacrifice.

In the entire recovery program, in my opinion, no more salutary piece of legislation was passed by the last Congress than that which created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Too much praise cannot be showered upon the administration for taking the initiative that gave to hundreds of thousands of our substantial citizens the right to save their humble homes. It is my firm belief that this legislation did more to avert riot, insurrection, and possibly revolution, by preventing the promiscuous foreclosure against the homes of our people, than any other measure adopted by Congress.

For the good this legislation has accomplished, I give thanks. For the abuses growing out of the administration of the act, I have nothing but a vigorous contempt. I shall offer to this Congress a resolution to investigate the various officials responsible for the irregularities, delay, discrimination, and graft incident to the administration of this efficacious piece of legislation.

The trouble started shortly after the act was extended to permit banks in the course of liquidation to transfer their mortgages to Uncle Sam, through the medium of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. In many thousand of cases the individuals were not in distress. I do not question the legal right of the banks to operate on a wholesale basis in transferring the mortgages to which I refer, but I maintain it was the intent of Congress that only those individuals who were in distress and whose homes were either in foreclosure, or foreclosure was imminent, should become the beneficiaries of this legislation.

It is common knowledge, and if the resolution I refer to is authorized by this Congress, I shall present specific cases where individuals not in distress were called in by certain banking institutions and urged to unload their mortgages on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I am prepared to prove in many cases that these loans were saleable assets. The applicants were not in distress, the interest, principal, and taxes paid to date, and the mortgagor satisfied to go along and make his payments to the institution that gave him the loan in the first instance. The total wholesale loans—that is, loans made by these banks regardless of whether the individual was in distress or not—according to figures obtained from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, amounted to $349,449,665, representing 122,881 mortgages. Through the wholesale division 79.5 percent of the cases have been cleaned up; whereas, in the individual cases, which represent to date 721,962 mortgages, valuing $2,148,060,491, 56 percent of the individual cases have been closed. These figures demonstrate conclusively that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation paid a great deal of attention to the applications wholesaled through the banking institutions, thereby discriminating against that class of individuals for whom the act was created.

At this time I can speak only for the Cleveland district, and present to this body this information: 8,000 loans have been approved in the Cleveland district, representing the sum of $30,000,000. There are now pending 16,000 applications from distressed home owners who have been notified within the past month that they must look elsewhere for the relief necessary to save their home from foreclosure. I charge that there is discrimination in favor of the banks; that many needy applicants have not received any consideration, and they will not receive any consideration until Congress definitely puts a stop to the practice of catering to a favored class. The Union Trust Co. of Cleveland, a bank that crashed because of the pastime of certain bank officials playing with other people's money, was privileged through the beneficence of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to close 6,317 cases out of 11,711 applications filed. The Guardian Savings & Trust Co., another bank that crashed because of the propensity of its officials to gamble with other people's money, liquidated 1,634 mortgages out of 3,990 applications filed. I daresay that this condition can be shown to exist in every congressional district, if investigation is had concerning this subject. I do not believe that there is a Congressman in this House who has not been beseeched by hundreds of his constituents during the past year demanding to know why they were not receiving consideration; claiming that after filing applications they never received any report whatsoever except a bill for appraisal fee, and that came after consideration was denied or ignored entirely. I am not defending that class of home owners whose property fails to meet a true appraisal sufficient to justify the loaning of money to prevent foreclosure, but I have in mind many cases, and I believe all of you have had similar experiences, where the applicant's property has been subjected to 3, 4, and more appraisals before a definite figure can be agreed upon as to its true value, and where despite the fact that the mortgagor is ready and willing to accept Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds, the title of the property being flawless, no result is forthcoming. I am prepared to show in many cases, if we get an investigation of the administration of this Corporation, that the board of directors, or those in charge of administering the act, adopted regulations directly in conflict with the intent of Congress.

Some of the regulations were to the effect that before an individual could qualify for a loan he must apply to three money-lending agencies, and in turn be denied relief from these agencies; that he must procure cosigners on the mortgage note. These regulations were never intended by Congress when it created this legislation. If so, Congress would have specified accordingly in the act before the law was passed.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE. I want to correct the gentleman's statement to this extent. In my State the administration of this Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been a credit to the national administration and a very effective agency.

Mr. SWEENEY. Yes. We know that there are many conscientious men in that Corporation, upon which I would not cast any aspersion, but we also know that there are many incompetents.

Evidence will be forthcoming, if we get an investigation, of individuals being discriminated against because of their political faith and because of their lack of political influence. The funds made available to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation were allocated to relieve distressed property owners. The act did not say you had to be a Republican, Democrat, a Socialist, or of no political belief, nor did it specify you had to have political influence to receive just and fair treatment. I do not believe the President of the United States nor this Congress will tolerate any such procedure, and it is for the purpose of asking your cooperation and support before any measure comes before this body to increase the base of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to take care in a large part the pending applications that we clean out the officials responsible for the abuses to which I refer and put men in charge of these various agencies who have the intelligence and experience to warrant clean administration of this law. Men have been selected and placed in charge of State and local agencies of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation who never saw a mortgage in their life, and in some cases their only qualification for the responsible position they hold was the endorsement of some ward or district leader.

The problem is one that concerns all of us. I appreciate that each one is hearing from the folks back home on this subject, hence I ask your cooperation and support of a resolution designed to investigate activities of this department of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the subcommittee during the hearings on this bill. It was a temporary assignment and my successor has been designated. I did not know this until the chairman of the whole committee announced it before his group yesterday. So my reaction from that experience is not so important as is that of the gentleman from Virginia or the gentleman from Massachusetts.

However, I have a few observations I want to make at this time. I want to say, in answer to the gentleman from Virginia, who has been a delightful chairman and who is one of the ablest men on either side of the House, I hope some day he will be Speaker if the Democrats are to continue in power. I want to say, in answer to his statement that the policies have been decided over there, that that is a sad thing. It is true that if we had a larger minority it would be better for the Government.

Naturally, we have been sort of cowed; we are timid, afraid to propose amendments because we know it is futile.

We might propose amendments if we had any chance at all of carrying them. I view with regret this added observation, and I speak of it particularly because the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] spoke about the reciprocal tariff.

It is true that this inevitable surge of bureaucracy is illustrated here better than any other place. We gave the President full power to do things that the Tariff Commission did.

Yet the Tariff Commission came before us and asked for an increase in personnel because of the new tariff. The State Department has asked for increased personnel to do the same thing also. The Commerce Department has asked for an increase of personnel to do those things, and we now have a bureau for an import and export bank, of which my good friend George Peak is at the head and which is designed to do those things too. Everybody is seeking to increase the power of the President. That is a thing which I view with regret. All of them have increased their personnel because of this reciprocal tariff act. Think that over. I am not talking as a carping Republican this afternoon. Let me be an American for a little while, particularly about some of these things. These different groups are coming before you. We have 30 of them.

The second thing I shall mention which struck me with concern is that practically every one of these new set-ups has a publicity bureau. I found one of these independent set-ups which admitted that it did not have any publicity bureau. Mr. Kennedy, of the Securities Commission, admitted that they did not have one. Even this import and export bank, which deals secretly with nations for trade purposes, has a publicity bureau. Think of that! Just examine these things as they pass. I would view such things with regret, whether my party or your party might be in power. We are tolerant of these emergency set-ups, because they are doing a lot of good in spite of many of the things they are doing which are of no value.

The real problem will face us as that time comes when we do not need to make political places for jobs. We tolerate them today because they are feeding somebody, possibly hungry children. We tolerate a lot of them because they provide positions, but when prosperity comes, and I think and believe it is coming, someone will have to reduce the personnel of these bureaus, and it is going to take men and women with courage to perform that duty.

Permit me to make these two constructive suggestions out of my short experience on this subcommittee. I do not see why we cannot use the clerks in the Committee on Appropriations in the off season to investigate these different bureaus and commissions and bring us here, as our representatives, the result of their contact and how they have seen things. These boys are high-class fellows. We keep them in the background. We want to extol ourselves and what we know about all these things, but really we would be fairly helpless if we did not have these boys, these expert boys in that committee, to help us, especially the newer ones on the committee. We have to depend on them all of the time for the information that we have. Why cannot we send them down to these places and let them bring in a report to us?

The second suggestion is this: The President issues the Budget. We are more and more falling in with the idea of standing by the Budget. We are commissioned from the people to appropriate the money, but are not allowed to go down there and sit in with the Budget Director. Their proceedings are not public. There is no printed record of the hearings on the Budget with these different bureaus and commissions and there is no way by which you can find out what goes on down there. No Member of the House or Senate Committee on Appropriations can go there and sit in. If we could bring that thing about so that men could be designated from the House Appropriations Committee to go and sit with the President's Budget Bureau hearing, I think it would be a fine thing for the country.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made this afternoon and to include therein certain charts, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, during the past few days, various Members have expressed themselves upon the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the necessity of continuing the activities of this governmental agency.

Those of us who were here during the Seventy-third Congress know that the act creating the Corporation and granting to it certain powers, was designed primarily as a relief measure. We knew of the extreme distress among home owners all over the country; we were treated to the spectacle of tremendous deflation in real-estate values, and we saw countless home owners, who had lost their jobs or whose income and wages had been seriously curtailed, unable to meet the payments upon their homes and many of them losing them through forfeiture and foreclosure.

To give these distressed mortgagors an opportunity of protecting their equities in their homes, in many instances the savings of a lifetime, we created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

We fully intended and expected that it would be administered as a relief measure. We would not as a government have gone into the business of making legal loans unless there was distress that could not be remedied by private loaning agencies. We expected those who were placed in positions of responsibility in its affairs to conduct its activities sympathetically and to the end that the relief intended by Congress would be afforded the citizen.

My district is one situated in northeastern Ohio—a highly developed, industrial section of the country; a district in which the population is largely urban. Perhaps there was no other part of the Nation in which a sympathetic administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was more necessary than in my own district. A great many applications were filed and many loans were made.

For nearly a year after the effective date of the act, the Ohio office managed to function in a very creditable manner. But late in the spring of 1934, the Washington office of Home Owners' Loan Corporation began to impose conditions and restrictions upon the making of loans; requirements for the granting of loans were put into effect which were entirely outside the language and the spirit of the act as passed by Congress. We found the Home Owners' Loan Corporation becoming a bureaucracy.

Let me quote from a letter received from one of the attorneys connected with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in an Ohio county, a man about 40 years of age, who is an intelligent, conscientious, ethical, and well-thought-of lawyer. He says:

> Since assuming the position of legal counsel for the H. O. L. C. of this county, I have worked night and day, holidays, and Sundays, having always in the back of my mind that there was an opportunity for me to make a record to which I could later point with pride and at the conclusion of the H. O. L. C., I could report back to you that my administration of this trust was at least to myself very satisfactory. But as time went on and I encountered the various redtape procedures and the continual change of policy by the H. O. L. C., I despaired of making a record and then only desired to preserve to myself the reputation which I felt that I had built up in the county as an efficient attorney at law.

No longer was the act administered for the purpose of affording relief to the distressed home owner. Appraisals made by local officials, familiar with the neighborhood and values in their own communities, found no favor in the eyes of the bureaucrats who administered the act at Washington. Appraisers from the outside were sent in to the various districts, who never liked the appraisals locally made, but seemed to find delight in scaling down those appraisals so that the distressed home owner could not qualify for a refunding of his mortgage.

The same attorney quoted above, in talking of the juggling of appraisals by agents of the Corporation, says:

> Many of our appraisals were cut as high as $2,000 to $3,000 on properties originally appraised for around $6,000 and then later cut by the State further, which indicates that the policy has been adopted by someone in Columbus or Washington to cause files to be rejected by the applicant or present mortgagee rather than by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation by means of slashes in appraisals beyond the point where the banks could afford to accept the cut. Either this or our appraisers did not know their business, and I would say that any one of the three county appraisers are leaders in the county and the price they fixed represents the true value of the property.
> If more bonds are appropriated by Congress at this session, I believe that all loans that have been rejected because of drastic appraisal cuts should be reinstated and be given a chance to redeem their property because most of them have faced and are now facing foreclosure and will eventually lose their homes. I feel sure the appraisal situation is due to a policy requirement and cannot be blamed on any individual or group of appraisers.
> Relative to the retroactive rules and regulations which compel us to rework the files previously worked under old rules and regulations, I believe that this comes from and is made necessary because of rules and regulations coming out of Washington.

So we can readily see why both the distressed home owner and the mortgagee, who loaned him the money, have lost all faith in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and it is not surprising the number of foreclosure actions which are being filed at the present time.

I am informed there are now pending in the courts of my home county, Summit County, Ohio, 5,000 foreclosure suits. In November 1934, 400 suits were filed, and the December filings, while not available to me, are at a greater rate.

I am advised by telegram this morning that a further stop order has been issued in Ohio to the effect that all home loans in which the State appraisal is dated after November 15, 1934, shall not be considered for closing.

Thus we see that loans have practically ceased and what had once been one of the most valuable assets of the Roosevelt administration became one of its greatest liabilities.

There are thousands of applications of eligible, distressed mortgagors on file, and when the public was informed upon November 15, 1934, that no applications could be considered except those in the hands of the attorneys, there arose a tremendous storm of protest. Is there any reason why John Smith, who was fortunate and was able to have his distressed mortgage refunded, should be preferred over his neighbor, Richard Brown, whose application may have been on file for months and who may be equally deserving, but who now has no opportunity of obtaining a loan through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation unless this Congress acts?

I made a trip into every county in the congressional district. I talked with distressed home owners, with business men, with bankers, with representatives of mortgage companies and building-and-loan associations, and I found not one single person who favored a discontinuance of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They all decried the inequities and the burdens that had been placed upon those attempting to obtain loans, but they all expressed themselves that if the bureaucratic control over the making of loans, exercised by the Washington office, could be removed, it was the plain duty of Congress to authorize the Corporation to issue additional bonds so that the work of relief might go on.

Banks, private loaning companies, are not ready to carry the burden of making loans to these distressed home owners. It is our duty, so long as that condition exists, to see that the Corporation is clothed with adequate financial authorization to carry on.

The institutional amendment, which Congress adopted to the Home Loan Act last April, which permitted banks and institutions in liquidation to refund mortgages held by them, whether the individual mortgagors were distressed or not, was so administered as to offend the public. While this amendment has some support in reason and was designed to thaw the frozen assets of closed banks, so that depositors might eventually be helped, fairness would dictate that distress of the individual mortgagor should be the sole test of eligibility for refund.

In my community many mortgages held by banks in liquidation were peddled to the H. O. L. C., where those owing the mortgages by no stretch of the imagination could be said to be in distress.

A prominent and well-to-do citizen has a sizable mortgage upon his well-kept-up and beautiful home. He has paid his interest and taxes and is not in arrears in his payments, nor is he in any manner distressed as far as his mortgage is concerned. Yet because that mortgage is held by a liquidating bank under the amendment of 1934, his mortgage is refunded, even though it may amount to $10,000 or $12,000 or more, and numerous persons who are in the greatest distress, although their mortgages may amount to only $1,000 to $2,000 each, are told they can have no relief.

for their mortgages are not held by liquidators and no further bonds are available to refund their mortgages.

Evidently most of us did not realize how this amendment was to work out, and the hardships it would entail to those private borrowers whose obligations were not held by closed banks.

The sole test of eligibility should be the distress of the individual if we are to get back to the fundamental purpose which prompted the enactment of this legislation originally. When we do adopt an amendment authorizing additional bonds, let us limit the powers of those who will administer it, and let Congress fix the rules of eligibility of the borrower. Take from the Home Loan Board the power to override the intent and language of Congress, and make this act in truth and in fact a measure which will bring real relief to thousands of our fellow citizens, whose mortgages are in distress and who will lose their homes unless we act and act speedily.

There are already pending several bills, one of which I introduced, authorizing the issuance of a further substantial amount in bonds. The authorizations in these various measures range all the way from $750,000,000 to $3,000,000,000. Let us, my colleagues, hope that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House will give early consideration to these measures and that one be brought to the floor of the House, carrying with it an authorization of sufficient bonds to insure the making of loans to all distressed home owners who are eligible and who are about to lose their homes unless we act.

Many of you, no doubt, little realize what it means to those who have worked for years and invested their savings in a little home. Are we going to stand by and see these people lose their homes under this further wave of foreclosures which has just started. I do not believe you will, for I think there are many of us who are alive to what is going on and to the urgent necessity of continuing, for the time being, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time to bring to the attention of the House a communication which I have received from Mr. J. W. True, a constituent of mine, who is an enterprising and progressive business man residing in Monroe County, Tenn. In the communication to me he enclosed the polls of the votes taken at a cotton gin in Monroe County on the proposition of the continuance of the Bankhead cotton bill and also the Hog, Wheat, and Corn Processing Act. Monroe County is the only county in my congressional district that produces cotton to any appreciable extent. According to the poll taken at this cotton gin, 343 cotton producers participated. The vote stood 341 against the Bankhead Act and 2 in favor of the Bankhead Act. [Applause.] On the proposition of the processing tax on corn and hogs and wheat, 165 farmers participated, and 165 farmers voted against the continuance of that act. [Applause.] These votes, Mr. Chairman, were a registration of the real sentiment of these farmers resulting from hard and oppressive actual experience. These polls were conducted with solemn formality, free from ballyhoo, banners, and brass bands, and without bureaucratic compulsion or interference, each farmer signing his name to the polls.

In this connection I might say that I voted against the Bankhead cotton bill because I thought it was unsound and unworkable, and my observation and experience with the operation of the act has confirmed me in that opinion. It is not only unsound and unworkable but results in a terrible hardship and imposition on the farmers. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, the independent offices appropriation bill is as you know one of the very important appropriation bills to come before this body. A great deal of work has been performed by the subcommittee under the distinguished leadership of that well-poised gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WOODRUM. With him as chairman, we worked during the month of December preparing these estimates for your consideration.

We were ably assisted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD], the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN], the distinguished economist from New England [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], and Mr. LAMBERTSON, from Kansas. So you see that the work done by this committee has been done by men who are thoroughly able and fit and competent to pass upon matters of this kind.

The independent offices appropriation bill, now before the House, carries appropriations for the regularly established independent bureaus, commissions, boards, and so forth, not under the jurisdiction of any Cabinet officer, with the exception of the Farm Credit Administration. The latter will be included in the bill for the Agricultural Department. Thirty different establishments are provided for.

The total of the direct appropriations carried in the pending bill is $776,916,706. This sum is $700,756 less than the total Budget estimates.

The total of the appropriations for the current year for the same activities as are provided for in the pending bill is $598,302,694. The independent offices chapter of the Budget includes the 1935 appropriations of $899,675,000 for emergency relief and public works and $525,000,000 for loans and relief in stricken agricultural areas, but the bill does not carry any appropriation for these items for 1936.

The bill, therefore, carries a total of $178,614,012 in excess of the comparable appropriations for the present fiscal year. Of this increase, $158,671,904 is on account of the Veterans' Administration. Pensions require an increase of $104,468,003; the appropriation for the adjusted-service certificate fund has been increased from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000; and there is an increase of $4,610,000 for military and naval insurance, due to a decision of the United States Supreme Court declaring unconstitutional section 17 of Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, approved March 20, 1933, which eliminated the adjudication by the courts of all claims incident to war-risk insurance contracts, with the exception of those cases in litigation at the time the amendatory legislation became effective.

The bill also provides an appropriation of $925,000 for construction, replacement, extension, alteration, remodeling, or repair of hospitals. This sum comprises sundry miscellaneous authorizations for which appropriations have not heretofore been made, and is in addition to unexpended and unobligated balances of former appropriations which are reappropriated. The latter comprise a total of $2,840,420, so that the bill actually provides a total of $3,765,420 for hospital purposes for 1936.

Due to liberalized provisions of Public, No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, enacted March 28, 1934, hospitalization and domiciliary care of veterans again becomes a factor of such proportions that consideration must be given to the providing of adequate and suitable accommodations in excess of those now available. Particularly is this true in connection with the hospitalization for neuropsychiatric disabilities. Although it is not contemplated that it will be necessary to build any new hospital units as a whole, it will be absolutely essential that certain facilities already built be altered, remodeled, or extended to accommodate this class of patients.

There will now remain but $4,000,000 of authorized hospital construction not already appropriated for, being the remainder of an original authorization of $20,877,000 carried in the so-called "Seventh Construction Act", approved March 4, 1931.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand that $143,000,000 have already been authorized, appropriated, and spent for veterans' hospitals?

Mr. BOYLAN. Four million dollars of the amount originally authorized remains to be spent.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But a total of $143,000,000 since the armistice has been authorized and expended?

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentlewoman is correct; $143,000,000 has already been spent.

Time will not permit a detailed discussion of every appropriation carried in the bill. These may be found in the report accompanying the bill. It is my purpose, however, to mention briefly a few of the more important and outstanding.

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION

The President, by an Executive order, under authority granted to him to reorganize the executive establishment, has transferred from the War Department to the American Battle Monuments Commission, the duty of caring for and maintaining the American cemeteries and war memorials in Europe. This Commission, under the able leadership of General Pershing, has recently completed the erection of the authorized memorials at a cost of approximately $4,500,000. The President, by his Executive order, has extended the life and the authority of the Commission and has intrusted to it the perpetual care of these memorials as well as the American cemeteries.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT FUND

The annual appropriation for the contribution of the Government to the civil-service retirement fund has been increased from $20,850,000 to $40,000,000. To put the fund on an actuarial basis there should be an annual appropriation of $52,000,000. The latter sum was requested of the Budget but the latter has submitted only $40,000,000 to Congress. The fund is ample to meet all current obligations, but the time is coming when the Government's contributions will have to be increased if the fund is to be definitely maintained in a state of solvency.

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

An expanding Federal establishment necessitates an increase for next year in the employees' compensation fund of $262,100, bringing the total appropriation to $4,250,000. The bill carries an authorization of $2,081,000 from the special fund set up in the Treasury for compensation for injuries received by employees in the Civil Works Administration and of $1,056,000 from the special fund for the Civilian Conservation Corps for injuries sustained by employees of that organization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I have some time remaining, and I will be glad to yield it to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am obligated to my esteemed colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] for the additional time, for which I thank him very much.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

The Federal Communications Commission was created to take over the functions of the Federal Radio Commission, and, in addition, to regulate the rates and services of all common carriers of communication by wire and radio. The Commission bears substantially the same relation to the communications industry as the Interstate Commerce Commission bears to rail-and-water transportation by common carriers. In addition, it regulates and polices the use of the air-wave channels in radio communication as was formerly done by the Federal Radio Commission.

The appropriation for the current year for the Federal Radio Commission was $666,885. The estimates for 1936 for the Federal Communications Commission total $1,525,000. The latter sum represents but a beginning. To carry out fully the authority conferred upon it by Congress, the Commission will require much larger annual appropriations than that included in the pending bill.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

The General Accounting Office is a service organization. As the Government establishment expands, the duties of the General Accounting Office undergo a corresponding increase, and proportionately larger appropriations are required. The pending bill carries a total of $4,970,600 for this activity, which is an increase of $508,680 over the amount appropriated for the current year. It is approximately $1,500,000 more than was appropriated for this office for 1934.

This is one establishment which pays for itself many times over, and it would be a serious mistake not to provide an adequate appropriation for its activities.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is a unique institution. Its personnel comprises some of the country's outstanding physicists and aviation experts, all of whom serve without pay. Its distinguished chairman is Dr. Joseph S. Ames, president of Johns Hopkins University. Officers of the Army Air Corps and of the Naval Air Service are assigned to the committee, and Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, as well as other aviation experts from private life, also serve on the committee.

This committee directs the work of the research laboratory located at Langley Field. It is by far the best-equipped laboratory in the world for research in aircraft problems. As a direct result of the discoveries and improvements developed at this laboratory, America today leads the world both in airplane design and in construction and operation.

The efficiency of this establishment is accounted for in large measure by the fact it is a wholly independent organization. In no other way would it be able to attract the services of the outstanding scientists and leaders in the field of aviation whose names now compose its roster.

NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD

The national mediation board succeeds the old board of mediation. The amended Railway Labor Act modified the mediative procedure of the old board. It provided a new feature in the form of the Railroad Adjustment Board. This Board consists of 18 representatives appointed and paid by the carriers and 18 appointed and paid by the employees.

The Board is located at Chicago, Ill., and the cost of subordinate personnel and other expenses is provided for in the pending bill in the sum of $156,000. The function of the Railroad Adjustment Board is to settle disputes between the carriers and their employees respecting the interpretation of agreements already in existence.

The functions of the modified mediation board are substantially the same as those of the old board. Practically the only change in its personnel set-up is the reduction of the number of board members from 5 to 3.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

The Securities and Exchange Commission is another new establishment which is bound to grow in size and importance unless Congress materially curtails its functions. In addition to licensing exchanges, the Commission is authorized to regulate and police trading thereon, as well as regulating over-the-counter sales throughout the country of securities not listed on the regular exchanges.

It also investigates any trading in securities which it believes to be manipulative in character, as well as a score of other duties, far-reaching in character, the ultimate cost of which is unpredictable.

The Commission requested of the Budget an appropriation of $4,277,000 for 1936. The Budget submitted to Congress an estimate of $2,370,000, which the committee has cut to $1,679,244. The committee believed the Commission was proposing an expansion far too rapid for sound organization building, and granted an appropriation which will continue the work during 1936 on the same level it is proposed to be conducted for the remainder of the current year.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, these are just a few observations on this bill. It is a very large and important bill and, as I said, covers very many activities of the Government. I believe under the leadership of our distinguished Chairman we have handled this bill in a manner that you would like to have us do.

I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PARSONS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3410, the independent offices appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ANNUAL REPORT NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the act of March 3, 1915, which established the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, I submit herewith the annual report of that Committee for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 10, 1935.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with paragraph 5, section 2, of the Army Appropriation Act approved August 29, 1916, I transmit herewith the Eighteenth Annual Report of the Council of National Defense for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 10, 1935.

ANNUAL REPORT OF COMMISSION ON ERECTION OF MEMORIALS AND ENTOMBMENT OF BODIES IN ARLINGTON MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the requirements of the act of Congress of March 4, 1921, I transmit herewith the annual report of the Commission on the Erection of Memorials and Entombment of Bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 10, 1935.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BROWN of Michigan, for several days, on account of important business.

REPUBLICAN POLICIES IN CONGRESS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio speech made by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech delivered by me over the National Broadcasting Co. network on Wednesday evening, January 9, 1935:

The President has spoken on the state of the Union, and much of what he said regarding the necessity of security insurance for American wage earners, presumably for old age and unemployment, is admirable. I hope no liberal-minded Republican will find fault with such a humanitarian program of social welfare when it is finally presented in proper legislative form. I introduced and urged old-age pension legislation in Congress 6 years ago.

As I listened to the balance of his address to Congress, I kept wondering where is the money coming from for such a gigantic public-works program. The P. W. A. has already spent $2,000,000,000, and I doubt if it has given steady employment to a million men. On that basis, it will cost seven billions to provide Government jobs to three and a half million employable men now on the relief rolls. The President's optimism is apparently based on the assumption that governmental funds are inexhaustible and that the resources and dollars of the American taxpayers are as numerous as the sands of the deserts and seas combined. Already the taxpayers, small and large, have been bled white and together with the consumers are rapidly being transformed into a special category of forgotten men and women.

The President's proposal, however, does not say a word about the remaining eight and a half million unemployed not on Government emergency work, or help private industry in any way to care for them. He avoided and ignored this issue, the most important confronting the American public, that of expediting the return to private employment of the 12,000,000 unemployed. His message to Congress did not in the slightest degree encourage or promote the restoration of business confidence, which is an essential prerequisite to the employment of American labor by private industry. The tragedy of the present economic situation is that every day since last May unemployment has been increasing, so that on January 1, 1935, there were 2,000,000 more unemployed, according to the American Federation of Labor, a nonpartisan authority, than there were a year ago.

The only thing that counts in war, from the time a soldier puts on a uniform and takes up a rifle, is success in battle; and so in the present economic warfare against depression the only real test of the new-deal measures, and the only thing that actually counts, is whether the socialistic experiments, some of which I voted for as temporary emergency measures, have been successful in putting men back to work.

The record, with the exception of an auspicious start backed by practically a united and unanimous public opinion, has dwindled away until Roosevelt and recovery are no longer synonomous except over the radio and in the press, inspired by several hundred publicity agents in Washington, paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The Roosevelt administration must survive or perish in the last analysis on its success in getting the wheels of private industry turning in order to provide employment for 12,000,000 of loyal and industrious Americans. The last 6 months have proved that most of the socialistic experiments of the "brain trust" are unworkable and unsound and are actually retarding business recovery. I honestly do not believe the American people realized the exact situation when they voted on November 6, as they were still thinking of the first year of the Roosevelt administration before the unsound new-deal policies had become effective. If these experiments had succeeded in their objective of providing permanent jobs even at the cost of fifteen billions in 22 months no Republican should in the midst of the present emergency denounce them or question the price.

But after almost 2 years, and with tragic failure of these half-baked expedients staring us in the face, it is the duty of the Republicans to point out the facts to the American public, and call a halt before millions more are unemployed through the destruction of business confidence.

The last election was not an election but a vote in favor of Santa Claus. Jolly Old Saint Nick did the political trick, and millions of relief workers were informed that if they failed to vote the Democratic ticket there would be no more work relief. There never was a more shameless and disgraceful election. The Treasury of the United States was used as a campaign chest by the Democratic Party for the first time in history. Work relief was used as a political football and partisan politics was played with human misery. Coercion and intimidation of the voters through work relief was the order of the day. A famous but inglorious victory was won by the Democrats, and, having fulfilled his political purposes, now Santa Claus is to be scrapped. What a travesty and hollow mockery of all the promises and inducements held out to the millions of relief workers to vote the Democratic ticket or starve! The following is an excerpt from a campaign letter sent out in my own congressional district in New York State, just prior to election, signed by nine men who were on or had been on the relief rolls:

"Your very existence is at stake. You can save a job for yourself and make jobs for your relatives and friends only by going to the polls on November 6 and supporting all the Democratic candidates, whose program is in full accord with the national program to this end. All of the Republican candidates are against the Democratic program, which has helped you and which will help you more. Vote the straight Democratic ticket on election day and save your job."

I denounced this letter immediately and publicly as being vicious and un-American, but when I asked Mr. Hopkins, the Relief Administrator, to take disciplinary action I received no assistance whatever. Although I voted for all C. W. A. appropriations, fortunately for me, I did not have to depend on the vote of the relief workers or the lack of cooperation of Mr. Hopkins, for without either I received a majority of 20,000 in the President's own congressional district, an increase over the previous election.

There has been a great deal of talk to the effect that the Republican Party must liberalize and humanize its policies. Some people have said that this is the function of the Republican National Committee. The record of the Republican Party will be formulated, shaped, and made by the votes of the Republican Members of the House and of the Senate, and not by any member of the national committee. The responsibility is ours and cannot be shirked. We must stand for liberalism or reaction. The final record will speak for itself when Congress adjourns. As for myself, I propose to give my heart, mind, voice, and vote to liberalize and humanize the Republican Party and to help regain the faith of the plain people in our sound principles and fundamental policies. We are still the party of prosperity and are needed more today than ever before.

Anyone who thinks the Republican Party is dead is crazy, or that it will enter into a coalition with the Democrats is equally unbalanced. Although we are few in number in the Congress we must not forget that we represent 13,000,000 voters, or 46 percent of the electorate. Let there be no pussyfooting or trading with the enemy on fundamental principles. My appeal is directed to all Republicans, liberals and conservatives, near Republicans, Jeffersonian Democrats, and all others who have lost faith in the unsound, unworkable, and socialistic plans of the new deal. It is our duty to expose these economic fallacies that are destroying public confidence and retarding business recovery and the employment of American wage earners.

Let me make very clear, speaking for myself and my Republican colleagues in the House of Representatives, we do not want any commiseration from the large Democratic majorities in both the House and Senate. We eschew their pity and spurn their condescensions. We ask for no quarter, nor do we propose to give any on the more radical, socialistic, and unconstitutional features of the new deal, and particularly where it infringes on representative government and turns the Members of Congress into rubber stamps. We would not change places with any Member on the Democratic side, who must spring through the hoops like trained animals every time Jim Farley cracks the whip, or jump like trained fleas every time the "brain trust" sends an administration message to Congress.

The election slogan of the Democratic Members was to stand by the President, and they are committed in advance, gagged and labeled, and delivered en bloc for those administration measures generally concocted by the "brain trust" and hurriedly looked over and approved by the President.

No, thank God, at least the Republican Members can speak and vote against bad legislation and favor sound legislation on its merits without being cracked down upon by the Democratic national chairman through the use of a huge patronage machine, a veritable Frankenstein, that he has built up.

The Republicans in Congress belong to the minority, or opposition party. We have not only the right but the duty to scrutinize and analyze all legislative proposals. While it is clear that we should not oppose legislation simply because it is offered by the administration, it is equally clear that we must not hesitate to rip off the sugar coating and see beyond the honeyed words and criticize all unsound legislation without fear or favor.

We must be militant Republicans and oppose, even at the loss of temporary popularity, all measures which we do not believe to be for the welfare of the American people.

While the President has had the backing of a subservient Congress, and billions have been appropriated, there are still more unemployed than under the Hoover administration. Republicans in Congress should vote to scrap most of the features of the N. R. A., which have been harmful to small business men and are gradually strangling them to death.

National recovery cannot be brought about by propaganda from the White House, Cabinet members, and paid publicity agents who have been ringing the changes and beating the tom-tom of prosperity for the past year, perhaps with some political success but to no good economic purpose.

The administration has tried to bring about national recovery by the use of honeyed words and propaganda, and again by threats and the bludgeon. All have failed because its fundamental policies are unsound and destructive of business confidence. Let the Government stop harrassing and hampering the business men with all sorts of new regulations and excessive taxation. The truth is that almost every man who has any substantial means left has lost confidence in the unworkable measures of the administration.

The national debt, which was twenty billions when the Democratic administration came into power, will be thirty-five billions by the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1935, and forty billions by the next year. There is scarcely enough revenue coming in to pay the interest on that amount. We are headed for inflation and its twin evils, chaos and bankruptcy. The worst of it is that Great Britain, Canada, and other nations that have balanced their budgets, are emerging rapidly to normal prosperity, whereas we lag behind the procession and are being dragged down deeper every day by enormous governmental expenditures. The homes, resources, and business of the American people are being devoured by taxation.

What is needed more than anything else is inflation of confidence through sound legislation, not inflation of money through governmental waste and extravagance. The Roosevelt policies are no sounder now than before election, as popular majorities do not change economic laws. The Mississippi bubble, for the time being, made John Law the most popular man in France until the crash came.

The Republican Party stands today, as it always has stood, for sound money, for sanctity of contracts, for the protective tariff, for parity on agricultural products in relation to other industries, for the employment of labor on the American wage standards, for national economy and a balanced Budget, for economic freedom, for social and industrial justice, and for the equitable distribution of the abundance with which our land has been endowed, instead of restriction when 12,000,000 are unemployed. We are opposed to Government ownership, state socialism, and a tyrannical superbureaucracy at Washington regimentating all of our lives and to inflation that leads to governmental insolvency.

More specifically, speaking for myself, I favor adequate old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, the abolition of tax-exempt securities, the regulation and control of munition plants, the conscription of wealth, industry, labor, and man power to take the profit out of war, a national referendum on war, a bonus by installments for veterans, the restoration of the civil service, full pay for Federal employees, and increased protection to American industry and labor wherever needed.

Lastly, let us hold fast to that which is good. Let us get back to the sound principles that made for the progress and security of our Nation. As a liberal Republican who believes in marching forward with the times, I confess I abhor the precipitate departure from long-tested traditions and that which has proved itself of indispensable value to the happiness and security of the American people for experiments made simply because they are new, which actually stop the wheels of progress and the employment of American labor.

If there had been more hard-hitting, aggressive, militant, fighting Republicans in the last campaign, we would have had a larger representation in both the House and the Senate. The need of the hour is militant Republicanism.

PAY RESTORATION

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, the President sometime ago stated that he was confident of pay restoration at the beginning of the next fiscal year, the question now is restoration of pay as of January 1.

It is suggested by those in touch with the issue that the President would like to recommend full restoration of pay to Federal employees as of January 1, but by law he can recommend increases only in keeping with results of the cost-of-living survey conducted by the Department of Labor. I can see no reason then for not supporting any legislation repealing that section of the Economy Act terminating the authority for reduction.

The minimum of justice to the great army of Federal employees requires full restoration of their basic salaries, effective January 1, 1935, and in so doing it would enhance the purchasing power of those who are solely dependent on the Federal Government, and thus start the wheels of progress from the bottom up.

There are a number of reasons why the 5-percent should be restored, provided there are sufficient Government revenues available to finance the restoration this fiscal year.

The Economy Act required the President to announce at intervals of 6 months a cost-of-living index, to be studied with reference to the base period, chosen as the 6-month period ending December 31, 1928. The index for this base period is 171. The indexes announced by the President, beginning with the period ending December 31, 1932, are as follows:

|---|---|
| December 1932 | 133.9 |
| June 1933 | 130.2 |
| December 1933 | 135.0 |
| June 1934 | 136.4 |
| December 1934 | 138.9 |

The cost-of-living index reached its lowest point in the 6-month period ending with June 1933, and the index then was 23.9 percent below the base period. It has reached its highest figure for the 6 months just ended but is still 18.8 percent below the base period. Under the terms of the law, pay was to be restored when the percentage difference between the 6-month index and the base-period index was less than the amount of the pay cut. Under the law—which expires automatically at the end of this fiscal year—salaries could not be restored until the cost-of-living index approximated the cost-of-living index for the last 6 months of 1928.

The Post Office Department faces heavy annual deficits, but the deficits are to a great extent attributable to payment of huge subsidies to steamships and air mail carriers. The Department's economy program during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, saved $100,000,000, but $80,000,000 of this amount was taken out of the wages of Department employees in every post office in the country. Those in regular service estimate closely that their 15-percent wage cut and payless furloughs amount to 27 percent of their previous income from which further reduction is made for their pension fund. Frequently, if not usually, when regular employees are absent, other regulars assume extra duties, leaving the substitutes idle.

The inconsistency of the Washington administration in urging higher wages in private industry and cutting wages and reducing forces in its own big business is manifest, but the postal workers are by no means the only losers. While the Government puts 4,000,000 men to work on more or less useful projects primarily for the purpose of providing employment, it curtails such essential services as mail collections and deliveries. Post-office patrons, business concerns especially, are seriouly inconvenienced. The Post Office Department itself suffers loss of revenue.

The impression must not be allowed to prevail, however, that postal salaries should be determined by the profit or loss experienced by the Post Office Department. A more fallacious argument could scarcely be advanced. The post office is a public institution, operated to serve the needs of the mailing public. The Department charges for its services, to be sure, but it is not operated in order to make a profit.

The sacrifices made by postal workers during the depression, the likelihood that living costs will rise shortly in 1935, the current revival of business, the need for mass purchasing power and business confidence, the presence of a postal surplus instead of the usual deficit, and the right of loyal civil servants to an adequate and rising standard of living all combine to make immediate pay restoration the least that the Government can do in fairness to the postal worker.

PAY-RESTORATION AMENDMENT

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill, which I expect to offer tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "namely" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and that so much as may be necessary is hereby appropriated for the payment, effective January 1, 1935, to all officers and employees of the Federal Government of the United States of full compensation without regard to the 5-percent reduction now in force:"

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 11, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this sacred stillness, Heavenly Father, we would lift our eyes unto Thee. Thou hast set Thy glory above the heavens. We beseech Thee to pour into our lives a high and holy meaning; renew, unfold, and refresh them. Even in the dark hours in which reason and experience fail, we pray for Thy comforting signals. We praise Thee for the assurance that Thy mercy strengthens, Thy heart forgives, and Thy wisdom will guide us aright. Send Thy light, which strikes a crimson pathway through the ages, and bless us with that spirit of brotherhood that breathes from the heaven of the Savior of men. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 364. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War in the District of Columbia;

S. 397. An act to provide for recording of deeds of trusts and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia, and for releasing thereof, and for other purposes;

S. 398. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto;

S. 399. An act to amend sections 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

S. 400. An act to permit the stepchildren of certain officers and employees of the United States to be admitted to the public schools of the District of Columbia without payment of tuition;

S. 401. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", approved February 27, 1929;

S. 402. An act to amend section 824 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia;

S. 404. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes; and

S. 408. An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act; and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read a resolution I now send to the desk, that it be incorporated in the RECORD, and that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to have read the resolution which he is sending to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the resolution?

Mr. SWEENEY. It is a resolution to investigate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members for the purpose of conducting an investigation into the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to determine the cause of the unnecessary delay, irregularities, or discrimination against applicants who qualify for a mortgage loan under the terms and provisions of the act of Congress creating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and to further inquire into any act of misfeasance or malfeasance on the part of any official, employee, or agency of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Ohio ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SWEENEY. No; I asked unanimous consent that the resolution be read, and then referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman wishes to submit a unanimous-consent request for its present consideration, I do not believe there will be any objection on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman asked that the resolution be read for information.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the resolution must be apparent to all Members who have been here during the last 2 or 3 days. Quite a portion of the general debate was directed against the activities and maladministration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I am pleased to know that the distinguished minority leader is willing to go along with me. I hope not from a political motive but rather because of the principle involved. I have no thought of politics in mind in introducing this resolution. There are many men on the Democratic side of the aisle who feel as I do about the matter. Many because of their experience have openly registered their complaints.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. There is no politics in it so far as I am concerned. All I want is an opportunity to present the situation that exists in my own State of New York.

Mr. BLANTON. And the situation that exists all over these United States.

Mr. SWEENEY. There are many men on this side of the aisle who have grievous complaints against the administration of this act, who, since the last session of Congress, have been importuned by all kinds of people who claimed they were the victims of discrimination, at least on the part of certain officials. I know, of course, that there are many fine, competent, and intelligent men in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and its various subsidiaries, but there are also a lot of incompetents.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I did not hear the first part of the resolution. By whom is the committee to be appointed?

Mr. SWEENEY. It is to be appointed by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. That fact alone insures that it will be nonpartisan.

Mr. SWEENEY. It will be a fair committee. I have confidence in the integrity of the Speaker of this House to know that he will appoint such a committee. I have the assurance of the distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], that we will receive an early hearing; and I shall be pleased to have Members interested get in touch with me, that we may arrange to go before the committee en masse or by groups to secure expeditious action and a favorable report from the committee.

ADDRESS OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not in this instance, there is a special order of business pending on the Speaker's table. I shall object to other unanimous-consent requests.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago the Comptroller of the Currency, Hon. J. F. T. O'Connor, made a very fine address before the Nebraska Bankers' Association at Lincoln, Nebr. Generally this address is a treatment of the work of the Bureau of the Comptroller during the past year and 10 months. Specifically it contains a great deal of information which I think will be useful to all the Members of the House regarding the working of the Federal deposit-insurance provisions of the banking law. It also contains specific information regarding the reopening and reorganization of national banks and the admission of State banks to the deposit-insurance fund. What is perhaps more pertinent to practically every Member here, because most of us have had complaints of this type, is that the Comptroller explains the method and policy of examination by the examiners of his Department. To my mind his statement effectively disposes of the alibi so often offered by our bankers as the reason for not loosening up on credit—because of the tightness of the examination by the Comptroller's Department. Here are given specific facts and figures. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have this address inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the gentleman's request the matter referred to will appear in the RECORD?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It relating purely to departmental work and not being a political speech, I have no objection to its being inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SISSON. I can assure the gentleman from New York that the speech is full of valuable information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of the Honorable J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, before the Nebraska Bankers' Association, Lincoln, Nebr., November 9, 1934:

You will be interested in a review of the main problems confronting the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which is a Bureau of the Treasury Department, after the banking holiday in March 1933, and the solutions of these problems. Two of the problems were entirely new, and it was therefore necessary to travel into unexplored territory without the guidance of experience or precedent. The first problem was the reopening of 1,417 unlicensed national banks with deposits of $1,971,960,000, which are under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency. The second was the approval of the sale to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to local interests of preferred stock in national banks. The third problem was the distribution of dividends to depositors in closed banks. The distribution of dividends has been an activity of the Comptroller's Office since the first bank closed, but new methods have been employed during the past 20 months.

The work accomplished could not have been done without the cooperation of the Congress of the United States. At the request of the President ample provision was made by Congress for reopening the closed institutions and giving much-needed relief to depositors.

At the close of the banking holiday an entirely new division of the Comptroller's Office was put together, and several floors of an adjoining office building were taken over for this work. Examiners were called in from different parts of the country; clerks, auditors, stenographers, typists—all worked early and late, under great pressure. We received as many as 7,000 letters in 1 week. Each and every one of the 1,417 banks had to be carefully examined, the assets appraised, and a plan prepared for its reopening. On November 1, 1934, 1,075 banks had been reorganized, representing $1,792,899,000 in deposits, while 30 banks had voluntarily liquidated and paid their depositors in full $11,204,000, and 297 banks had been placed in receivership, representing $153,336,000 in deposits. The depositors in these particular receivership banks have received $42,328,657. When a bank is placed in receivership, it does not mean that it has no chance to be reopened or reorganized, as we had on November 1 approved plans for reopening 10 of these receivership banks with deposits of $4,754,000.

It is indeed a great pleasure to state to you today that there are only 15 banks in conservatorship, representing $14,433,000 of deposits, and of these, 13 have plans approved for reorganization, with deposits of $13,653,000 which will be released shortly. In other words, 20 months after the banking holiday there remains undisposed of less than three-fourths of 1 percent of the deposits in the 1,417 unlicensed banks as reported at the close of the banking holiday.

A careful survey of the banking situation of the Nation showed that values on property of all kinds have been greatly depressed, and our banks contain numerous items which debtors could readily have paid under ordinary conditions but were not able to pay because of the financial collapse. The President appreciated this situation and realized the importance of the banking institutions to the country. To avoid further distress to depositors he requested the Congress of the United States to permit the Government to purchase preferred stock in these banks. Let me use his own words: "To accept the Government's offer to purchase preferred stock does not mean that a bank is weak, but that it is eager to cooperate in the recovery effort to the fullest possible extent and thus undertake to put this additional capital to work. We are not thinking of idle capital. We are thinking of working capital—capital working for recovery."

It is unnecessary to call your attention to the tremendous amount of detailed work in connection with applications for preferred stock—waivers, consent of stockholders, resolutions of the board of directors, and of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as well as a careful check in the Comptroller's Office and approval by the Secretary of the Treasury. If you will keep in mind these various complicated steps, you will have some idea of the task involved in the sale by 1,835 national banks of $473,353,550 in preferred stock to local interests and to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by November 1, 1934.

The third important problem referred to was the relief given to depositors in closed banks. Since March 16, 1933, there has been distributed through the office of the Comptroller of the Currency to depositors in closed national banks over half a billion dollars, or to be exact, $555,160,062.

In Nebraska at the end of the banking holiday there were 21 national banks unlicensed, with deposits of $6,503,000. It will interest you to know that every one of these has been disposed of. Fourteen were reopened, representing deposits of $5,462,000; 1 bank, with deposits of $99,000, has gone into voluntary liquidation; and 6 banks, representing deposits of $942,000, have been placed in receivership.

The combined deposits of these 14 reopened institutions and the one now being voluntarily liquidated amounted to $6,128,000, or 85.5 percent of all the deposits tied up in unlicensed Nebraska national banks on March 16, 1933.

In most respects recent bank "calls" by the Comptroller of the Currency have indicated that national banks in your State are making steady progress. The one exception is the matter of loans and discounts, which declined 6.8 percent during the first half of the current year.

However, with an increase of only 7 percent in the number of licensed national banks, investments of Nebraska national banks rose 31.8 percent between the end of 1933 and the middle of 1934; total deposits increased 30.9 percent, and total assets gained 26.7 percent.

Results of the last three "calls"—December 30, 1933, March 5, 1934, and June 30, 1934—for Nebraska national banks are given in the following tabulation:

| | Dec. 30, 1933 | Mar. 5, 1934 | June 30, 1934 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Number of national banks | 128 | 132 | 137 |
| Loans and discounts | $62,416,000 | $60,848,000 | $58,119,000 |
| Investments | 71,439,000 | 91,441,000 | 94,174,000 |
| Total assets | 192,580,000 | 232,147,000 | 244,096,000 |
| Total deposits | 162,092,000 | 201,442,000 | 212,338,000 |

The remarkable record which has been made in rehabilitating the banking structure of the Nation would have been impossible without Government assistance. That this aid has been given in gigantic proportions, in the interests of the people of the United States, is indicated by the following figures:

Through October 31, 1934, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had authorized loans to banks and trust companies—open or closed—in the sum of $2,222,815,803. Of this amount, $1,698,906,340 had actually been disbursed to those institutions by that date. Moreover, in an effort to rehabilitate the capital structure and to make possible a greater extension of credit, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had authorized the expenditures of $1,128,794,295 through October 31, 1934, in loans on preferred stock of banks and trust companies, subscriptions for the preferred stock of such institutions, purchases of capital notes and purchases of debentures. Of this amount, $906,764,407 had then actually been disbursed.

Without these huge disbursements by this governmental agency it is certain that hundreds of banks which have been reopened since March of last year would still be closed, and depositors would be clamoring in vain for their funds.

The banks of your State have not been overlooked in this rebuilding movement.

Through October 31, 1934, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had authorized loans to Nebraska banks and trust companies—open or closed—in an aggregate of $6,926,349. Of this amount, $5,586,651 had actually been disbursed up to that time.

However, your Government did not stop there. So as to rebuild the capital structures of your banking institutions, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had authorized the expenditure of $8,675,000 in subscriptions to preferred stock and loans on preferred stock of Nebraska banks—State or National—through the close of business October 31, 1934. Of this total, $7,594,450 had then actually been disbursed.

We hear a great deal of talk these days about the "heavy cost of receiverships", and there is considerable attempt to make the public believe that receivers, their attorneys, and assistants charge such large fees that nothing is left for the poor depositor. The picture commonly portrayed is a pitiful one, but it has one drawback—it isn't true.

Receiverships—at least national-bank receiverships—are conducted with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of expense. From the date of the first failure of a national bank in 1865 to October 31, 1933, national banks placed in receivership numbered 2,514. Of these, 1,155 have been entirely liquidated and their affairs closed. Expenses incident to the administration of these 1,155 closed trusts, such as receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses, amounted to 3.90 percent of the book value of the assets and stock assessments administered, or 6.66 percent of collections from assets and stock assessments.

In other words, about 94 cents out of every dollar collected by receivers went to depositors.

There are today 32 national banks in receivership in your State, including 6 placed in receivership since the banking holiday of last year. At the time of suspensions these institutions owed their depositors $10,383,543. Today depositors in these 32 defunct banks have coming to them, according to the books, $5,420,797. In other words, depositors in closed national banks in Nebraska have received, on the average, 50 percent of their funds, with more to come.

Much has been said about the opposition of the administration to bankers generally. It is not necessary to point out the fact that this is not true. From time to time suggestions have been made as to how this or that particular group in the Nation could assist in the recovery program, and these constructive suggestions can hardly be construed as an opposition policy. Probably the most generally circulated report is that the bankers cannot make loans because the national-bank examiners are too critical and harsh in their examinations. This problem has been a matter of serious concern to the Comptroller's Office. It was the opinion of all fair-minded men that assets should not be appraised at a figure which could be realized in a distressed market, but that assets had an intrinsic value, or, if you please, a recovery value. It was agreed, therefore, to have bank examiners appraise assets on this basis. The Comptroller of the Currency sent, on October 26, 1933, to each of the 12 chief national-bank examiners in the United States instructions to this effect:

"After the 'bank holiday' national-bank examiners were largely engaged in the examination of banks which did not receive a license for the purpose of reorganization. It appears that some examiners, in making examinations of licensed national banks, have become what might be termed 'reorganization minded' and have lost sight of the President's recovery program and its relation to licensed banks. It is the administration's desire that credit channels be opened through licensed banks, and this policy cannot be accomplished if examiners follow a deflation policy in examinations. We are all concerned in having solvent banks, but there is a wide distinction between the potential and intrinsic value of assets of a going institution and liquidating values. Examiners, in appraising and classifying assets of licensed banks, will not apply liquidating values but will appraise on the basis of fair values on a recovery basis. As an example: In dealing with bank buildings the examiner must realize that a bank building of a going bank has an intrinsic value, as distinguished from present depressed values, which, combined with the element of recovery, may fully substantiate the carrying value given to it by the bank. The same is true of mortgages, and in this connection the examiners should familiarize themselves with the instructions given with respect to real-estate mortgages by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to its examiners.

"You will advise examiners who are examining licensed banks, of this policy and see that it is carried out. Any examination now in process, or any future examination, will be governed by these instructions and where an examination has been completed, the examiner making the report will review the report on the above basis and rewrite such report if found necessary. If the examiner is not now available, it may be necessary to make a new examination on the proper basis."

Again on March 13, 1934, the following instruction was sent to all chief national-bank examiners:

"Reports of examinations received by this office recently clearly indicate that some few of the examiners throughout the country have not fully grasped the meaning of instructions communicated to the chief examiners under date of October 26, 1933, and are making more drastic classifications of assets of the banks examined by them than is necessary under the circumstances and more severe than is contemplated by the instructions contained in office letter referred to above.

"If there are in your Federal Reserve district any examiners who, in your opinion, are making unnecessarily drastic classifications of assets, please confer with them promptly, looking toward having their classifications as lenient as circumstances in each case will permit and in order that they will be in accord with the policies of this office.

"While you are familiar with the character of examinations made by your examiners, it is suggested that in determining whether or not any of them are too severe in their classifications, you give particular attention to their appraisals of banking houses, furniture and fixtures, and loans secured by real estate."

No system is perfect because men are not perfect. Here and there isolated cases appear where examiners have been too harsh. These instances are sometimes called to the attention of the proper officials, but where examiners are too lenient that fact seldom appears. The instructions which I have cited have never before been made public. However, I believe the time has come to clarify a criticism which is unfair. The question naturally arises, What were the results obtained under the instructions? Again, for the first time, I will give you a complete picture of the examinations made by the national-bank examiners as shown by 1934 reports of examination. As is well known to bankers, examiners classify loans under three headings—slow, doubtful, and loss. There is little room for argument when assets are placed in the loss column and very little question arises in the doubtful column. The slow column attracts the most attention and controversy. An examination of the reports filed in the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency in each of 5,275 banks reveals the following interesting figures: The total amount of loans was $7,740,596,000. The examiners placed 2.88 percent of these loans in the loss column and 4.19 percent in the doubtful column and 27.05 percent in the slow column. The country has been advised of the definition of slow paper as follows:

"The examiners, when classifying loans as slow, should state briefly the reasons for such classifications, but should bear in mind that the responsibility for determining and taking such action as may be necessary to place such slow loans in proper bankable shape rests entirely with the bankers. The examiners, therefore, should refrain from instructing the bankers as to what course they should pursue with their customers whose paper is classified as slow."

This conclusively proves the understanding and sympathetic attitude on the part of your Government toward the banks of the country.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution providing for the appointment of the majority members of the standing committees of the House and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 45

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION HAS HELPED THE PEOPLE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some facts and figures in reference to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and I ask permission to do so by extending whatever I have to say in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak upon the subject of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation because I took it for granted that there would be no opposition to a continuance of the activities of the Corporation. During the debates on the sundry appropriations bill before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the 9th and 10th of January, I observed that there was some definite opposition to a continuance of the enterprise.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] voiced considerable opposition to the Corporation, naming as a reason that there was incompetency in the administration of it, and that the point had been reached in his district where the chairman of the board was going over the heads of Congressmen to make appointments of appraisers and other administrative officers and that worthy loans were turned down, and in other instances great favoritism had been shown. I do not contend that the gentleman is in error.

In my State—North Dakota—both Congressmen are Republicans, and, of course, have not been consulted on any appointments made in the administrative department of the Corporation handling the business in the State. I believe it would be a much better policy to at least consult with us, as I am sure we have no other desire than to see the Corporation function efficiently for all of the people of our State. But even if we are never consulted about this matter, I still feel that we want to have this important field of activity continued in our State.

Since the latter part of the year 1932, there has been no activity of any wide range among any other loan agencies within the State which could supply funds for the needs of home owners. For several months before the beginning of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in North Dakota I believe it fair to state that there was no agency operating within the State which was in a position to extend loans on homes. This institution was created because of a great necessity, during an emergency period, and that emergency has not yet passed. The wisdom of the President and Congress in enacting into law this necessary legislation, at this particular period of our history, cannot be denied by anyone who is fair-minded. To continue the work, I believe, is as necessary now as it was to inaugurate the plan in the first instance.

That the Corporation has filled a great gap in our national finance scheme cannot be doubted when we examine the following figures:

|---|---|
| Number of applications received by the Corporation from its inception to Dec. 27, 1934, was | 1,246,091 |
| Number of applications completed and money advanced | 721,962 |
| Number of applications passed but held for minor detail adjustment | 199,129 |
| Number of applications still pending, awaiting further authorization from Congress | 325,000 |
| Actual money advanced to Dec. 27, 1934 (approximately) | $2,165,886,000 |
| Money available to close approved applications (approximately) | 597,387,000 |
| Total amount made available | 2,763,273,000 |
| Amount necessary to complete pending loans (approximately) | $924,000,000 |
| Average size loan | $3,024 |

NORTH DAKOTA RECORD

|---|---|
| Number of applications received | 5,288 |
| Number completed and paid | 3,654 |
| Number awaiting action of Congress | 1,634 |
| Percentage of loans actually completed (in the Nation) | 59 |
| Percentage of loans actually completed (North Dakota) | 79 |
| Percentage of loans completed and awaiting minor details (in the Nation) | 74 |

On account of being more familiar with the work and not being deluged as the administration was in the early days of a new work, it is estimated that 95 percent of pending applications will be acted upon favorably. (The above figures were furnished by John W. Childress, assistant to the chairman of the board.)

From the above figures it must be apparent to Members of Congress that the corporation has made a wonderful showing in the short time that it has been in existence; and in North Dakota I am personally aware that it has saved the homes of 3,654 owners, who, without the benefits of the plan, would have been homeless today so far as legal title is concerned, and would have been completely homeless had not the moratorium and the holiday association in North Dakota prevented foreclosures and evictions.

Abuses have naturally developed in the handling of this immense business. We are not without complaints from North Dakota. It has been reported to me that in one of our largest cities favoritism has been shown to banks and building and loan associations, while the individual mortgagee and lien holder has been shunted aside. It also has been reliably reported to me that appraisers have been chosen who are incompetent and who have favored large corporations. It has been reported to me that some of the appraisers for the home-loan bank were also collectors of campaign funds for the Democratic Party, and that they have made collections from concerns who were interested in having appraisements made which would safeguard their mortgages.

I am confident that this information was never presented to the chairman of the Board. I am also satisfied that the Board would be willing to correct these evils, when the matter is presented to them with proof. I propose to do that very thing—I propose to present affidavits covering these charges to the Board, and to an investigation committee of Congress if necessary. In spite of this situation, there can be no just reason why Congress should desire to abandon the whole project merely because evils have developed in the system. Remove the evils but do not abandon this important Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is recognized for 45 minutes.

PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rather think that this case might be developed more to the satisfaction of the House if I proceeded to a conclusion of my remarks without interruption, and then I will be very glad to yield to anyone who desires to ask questions.

In order that the House may have a picture of what we have been doing in these investigations, although there may be some reiteration, may I state to the House that in the first instance the examinations that the committee through special counsel has been making into the holding companies has been going on since the Seventy-first Congress.

PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

First. Railroad holding companies: Pursuant to House Resolution 114, Seventy-first Congress, second session, an investigation of railroad holding companies was made. The report in this investigation entitled "Regulation of Stock Ownership in Railroads", and containing three parts, was submitted to the Congress on February 20, 1931. As a result of this investigation and report a bill was prepared by your committee, H. R. 9059, Seventy-second Congress, first session, which was later incorporated in title II of the Emergency Transportation Act of 1933, Senate 1580, Seventy-second Congress, first session, which was approved by the President June 16, 1933.

Second. Oil pipe lines: By authority of House Resolution 59, Seventy-second Congress, first session, an investigation of oil pipe lines was made. The report in this investigation entitled "Report on Pipe Lines", containing two parts, was submitted to the Congress on March 2, 1933.

Third. Power and gas companies: Pursuant to House Resolution 59, Seventy-second Congress, first session, and House Joint Resolution 572, Seventy-second Congress, second session, an investigation has been made of holding companies in power and gas. The report in this investigation is divided into six parts. Part I, entitled "Report on Directors and/or Officials of Holding Companies and Operating Companies in Power and Gas", was submitted to the Congress on February 21, 1934. The remaining parts, II to VI, inclusive, are now in the hands of the Printer and will be submitted in the near future.

Fourth. Communication companies: Pursuant to House Resolution 59, Seventy-second Congress, first session, and House Joint Resolution 572, Seventy-second Congress, second session, an investigation has been made of communication companies. The report in this investigation is divided into three parts. Part I, the preliminary report, was submitted to the Congress on April 18, 1934. Parts II and III, making the completed report, were submitted as of June 4, 1934. On that date part II was distributed. The Government Printing Office now has part III practically ready for distribution. In connection with this investigation and report, the Communications Act of 1934 became law on June 19, 1934, when the President approved S. 3285.

This law brought together under one commission all the communications activities of the Government instead of scattered throughout the various departments of the Government.

I may say further that these four very far-reaching investigations were made by your committee with an appropriation of only $150,000. Ten thousand dollars was turned back into the Treasury at the end of the railroad-holding company investigation, and $10,000 more will be turned back at the end of this investigation, making the whole investigation cost the Government only $130,000.

In view of the extensive investigations of this industry by the Federal Power Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, involving an aggregate expenditure of $4,514,368.24, in the power field, your committee limited their inquiry to obtaining an over-all picture of the power industry and relations between the holding companies and the operating companies. The committee made an intensive study of some of the holding companies at the top of such systems as the Insull set-up. The greater part of our funds were expended on the holding-company inquiry in utilities, other than power companies. The committee first made a comprehensive and detailed study of the railroad holding companies. You are familiar of this report in three volumes. Based upon the disclosures in that investigation the committee recommended a bill to regulate the railroad holding companies. This bill was incorporated as a part of title II of the Transportation Act of 1933, and on June 16 of that year became law.

Another comprehensive inquiry was made of the stock ownership and control of the oil pipe-line companies. This report in two volumes you received in this House on March 2, 1933. This report has been of great assistance to the committee in dealing with various bills that had been referred to the committee which were drawn with a view of further regulating oil pipe lines. That report called for a further study of the oil industry itself if there should be complaint that the legislatures in the oil-producing States were not adequately coping with the problems of conservation. As a result of complaints brought to our attention, the committee recommended House Resolution No. 441, Seventy-third Congress, second session. Under this resolution a subcommittee, with Congressman COLE as the chairman, has made a most thorough inquiry into the conditions surrounding production and distribution of petroleum and its products.

The committee has completed an investigation of the stock ownership and control of natural gas pipe lines which will be distributed within a few days. The Interstate Commerce Act exempts gas pipe lines from common carriers—that is, a gas pipe line is not in the law classified as a common carrier. As a result of our study we find that this classification of gas pipe lines by the Congress was correct.

As a result of a study of the pipe lines, we find that the gas pipe-line company has never been defined as a common carrier, and as a result of our investigation we find that that is probably correct.

The investigation discloses that natural gas is now carried direct from Nature's reservoir in the earth through the casing in the gas wells through pipe lines to consumers in the villages, towns, and cities of the several States. When a reservoir of natural gas is connected by an interstate pipe line with the cookstoves, water heaters, refrigerators, and furnaces of consumers in different States, the gas in the field is placed in interstate commerce. That is true not only of the gas passing through the pipe line but it is also true of the gas in Nature's reservoir in the earth. That is because there is no way to store this gas above the ground. It is carried by the pressure in the earth itself through the wells through connecting pipes for a considerable distance into the main pipe line. Through a system of pumping stations, the gas can be boosted economically for even a thousand miles by reason of this initial start from the natural pressure within the earth. In fact, the Columbia Gas Co. now owns a half interest in a pipe line from the Panhandle in Texas to Indiana, where it connects with the system lines of that company through which natural gas is distributed to the cities on the Atlantic seaboard and Washington, D. C. It is possible that gas comes from the Panhandle in Texas through these series of pipe lines to Washington itself. It is true that most of the gas originating in the Texas field is consumed long before it reaches the Atlantic seaboard; but it is also true that the gas burner in a gas range in the city of Washington is directly connected with Nature's reservoir of gas near Amarillo, Tex. If legislatures in the States where natural-gas deposits are found, and which have become connected with users in other States, do not protect the gas field, it then becomes the duty of Congress to do so. Congress must see to it that there is no waste through neglected wells which will deplete the supply or which will reduce unduly and prematurely the natural pressure of the gas in its deposits.

We have power, in my opinion, to regulate the conditions under which gas is taken from the fields in order to protect these fields which are in interstate commerce and which are so necessary to the welfare of thousands of consumers. The Congress has power also to regulate accounts of these gas pipe-line companies, the issue of their securities, and to require a certificate of convenience and necessity before an additional gas pipe line can be built to a gas field already connected with an interstate pipe line. The Congress also has power, I believe, to regulate the wholesale price of the gas from the pipe line to the local distributing companies. While Federal power might even extend to the price paid by the individual consumers, I believe that the regulation of those prices should be left to the State authorities.

Your committee has also made a study of the stock ownership and control of communication companies. That report in preliminary form was submitted on April 18, 1934. The report in final form, with the details of several hundred smaller companies, the Government Printing Office now has ready for distribution. In the light of this inquiry your committee drew House bill no. 8301. This bill was substantially the same as Senate bill no. 3285. The Communications Act was approved and became law June 19, 1934.

These inquiries into the ownership and control of operating companies in the fields of transportation by railroad, by pipe line, by copper wire, and through the ether have led me to certain conclusions as to holding companies and their relations to public-utility operating companies. A holding company is a corporation primarily organized to own securities issued by other corporations. Commissioner Walter M. W. Splawn, who was special counsel to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the holding-company inquiries, has defined the holding company as follows:

> The holding company may be defined as any company which, by virtue of its ownership of securities, is in a position to control or substantially influence the management of one or more other companies; that is, a holding company is different from a mere investment company. An investment company buys securities as an investor would do and without any purpose of determining the policy of the management. But when a company, by virtue of its ownership of securities, is in a position to control or substantially to influence the management of another company, it is properly classified as a holding company.

I think that is the best definition and best set-up of what a holding company is that I have ever heard.

Originally a corporation did not have the right to own stock of another company. At common law that was regarded as an unthinkable practice. Courts permitted banks to hold stocks which had been used as collateral only until they could be disposed of in the interest of the stockholders of the bank. Less than 50 years ago legislatures in New Jersey and other States began to authorize by general statutes the creation of corporations which would have the power to own shares in other companies. During the past generation the ablest legal talent in the country has been diligently devising ways and means by which the power of an artificial creature, a corporation, could be extended to control and own and deal in evidences of property rights and certificates of stock of other companies. The results of this ingenuity of able lawyers to persuade legislatures to write cunning statutes and courts to place shrewd constructions on those statutes has given the American people a master in the form of the holding company. This master is soulless, impersonal, intangible, immortal, and wellnigh all-powerful. This creature of our statutes holds under its control billions of dollars' worth of property scattered throughout the country and sometimes around the world. Its decisions can shut down mills, move factories, reduce employees to a state of serfdom, strip the stockholders of local companies of their equities, siphon off the earnings of profitable companies, beyond the reach of their stockholders to the stockholders of other companies. This creature of our imagination is permitted to act as a normal person, to contribute to campaign funds in municipal, State, and national elections; to hire clever writers to carry on campaigns of propaganda, to centralize the control of industry. These creatures of our legal ingenuity are operated by a few clever men. They are used as the agencies for disfranchising stockholders of thousands of necessary and prosperous operating companies. They are used to take the control and direction of these local companies away from those who built them and place it in a city oftentimes far removed.

Through the simple device of pyramiding, a small investment by those in control of the top holding company enables them to do as they like with hundreds of millions, and in some instances even billions of other people's property. In one system the pyramiding goes so far as to pile one company on top of another until there are 10 corporations in the pyramiding, or the local operating company is 9 companies removed from the corporation at the top which controls it along with hundreds of others. In this particular set-up an investment of $1 at the top enables the managers of the top to control over $30,000 of book value of the operating companies, or with less than $50,000 to control over a billion dollars of book value.

This company is the Associated Gas & Electric Co. In another set-up, by an investment of about $23,000 at the top of the pyramid, book values of $1,200,000,000 are controlled. This company is the Standard Gas & Electric Co.

This pyramiding, supplemented by the use of service contracts and sometimes other practices, has made for a concentration of management that is staggering to the imagination. In one office building in New York City, those in charge of a paper holding company, with a very small investment and scarcely any risk of their own capital, are able to control hundreds of operating companies scattered clear across the United States. This company is the Electric Bond & Share. They are able to say to those operating companies what they shall buy, from whom they shall buy, at what price, and with whom they shall engage services and contract for supplies.

Of course, they trade with their subsidiaries. They will appoint someone in the top company or in one of their service subsidiaries to be secretary of many of the important operating companies. We found one case in which a man was secretary or an officer in more than 200 corporations.

That was Mr. Summerson, of the Electric Bond & Share.

These paper companies at the top of the pyramid as a rule operate nothing. They claim that they are beyond the control of any State authority because they are not selling transportation or any public-utility service. They hold themselves out as investment companies. They have undertaken to get beyond the reach of government.

Let me recite some examples of the practices of these top holding companies:

First. They have been used in paper transactions to defeat assessments of income taxes to the Federal Government. The holding company appears to have been quite useful in creating fictions under which technical requirements of the Bureau of Internal Revenue could be circumvented.

Second. The holding company has lent itself to the abuse of paying its officers high salaries and bonuses, sometimes of astounding magnitude. In 1925 a man by the name of Foshay received $306,000 in salary and bonuses.

Mr. Foshay was the head of the Minneapolis & St. Paul Co. I think since that date he has been detained in some Federal institution.

It turned out that the activities of his company became a national scandal. The ease with which the officers of a holding company, through salaries and bonuses and profits in intercompany trading in securities, are able to appropriate to themselves the earnings of operating utilities has been surpassed only by the secrecy of such actions. This secrecy was possible by reason of the holding company, and itself was an encouragement to avarice and irresponsible conduct.

Third. Another evil fostered by the holding company is fictitious stock subscriptions. Huge transactions have been effected by mere entries on books without any transfer of money or credit.

Fourth. It is in the power of the controlling holding company to make arbitrary apportionments of expenses to the operating companies. There is evidence that some holding companies apportioned to the operating companies the expenses of rendering services to them, and, at the same time, collected from the companies fees for the services.

Fifth. There have been abuses in the appraisal of properties by the service companies controlled by the holding company at the head of the system. The California commission in one case found appraisals of properties within that State which had been made under the direction of a holding company twice as much as the California commission could allow. Again and again there appear in rate cases throughout the different States so-called "expert" engineers and accountants who give testimony as to the value of operating properties. These experts frequently qualify as being in the employ of a corporation skilled in making appraisals. The truth is that the corporation is frequently a subsidiary of a holding company owning the operating company whose rates are in litigation, and these so-called "experts" take their orders from the management of the top holding company. Instead of the appraisals having been made by independent engineers, they merely amount to self-serving declarations.

Sixth. These self-serving appraisals of operating properties by service organizations owned by the holding company have lent themselves to write-ups of assets. These write-ups through juggling of accounts in response to appraisals under the control and at the direction of the holding company have contributed to the deception of investors, of State regulatory authorities, and of consumers.

Seventh. The contracts with a service company imposed upon the operating companies by the top holding company have in turn been capitalized according to the value which the convenience of the management of the holding company seemed to dictate. Such a capitalization of service contracts is reflected in the accounts and financial structure of the system.

Eighth. A holding company lends itself to an inequitable distribution of securities. The insiders, those who direct the top holding company, are able to benefit at the expense of other stockholders.

Ninth. The abuses in the use of publicity by the direction of managements of the holding companies has become scandalous. Note—

THE ADVERTISEMENT MEN BEHIND THE W. B. FOSHAY CO.

An idea always originates with one individual. Every activity, whether in business or in other avenues of experience, had its beginning with a single person. Run down the list of scientists and inventors—there was Newton and the law of gravitation, Watt and the steam engine, Fulton and the steamboat, Marconi's cable, Bell and the telephone. Modern business institutions, such as the W. B. Foshay Co., are no exception. This company began modestly in one small room in the National-Soo Line Building, Minneapolis. That was 10 years ago. Mr. Foshay had the idea; he put it into execution. It came to him after many years of actual experience in the public-utility and financial field. He knew the business of producing gas and electricity from the power plant and gas works up to the executive's duties. * * * (Everyone calls to mind the actor who was hired to impersonate a counselor to investors in a series of radio broadcasts.)

Tenth. Investors frequently do not distinguish between the regulated issues of securities by operating companies and the unregulated issues of the holding company at the head of the system. This confusion and the fact that the issues of the holding companies were not regulated resulted in losses to thousands of investors.

Eleventh. Holding companies have inflated their income by taking upon their books the earnings and the donated surplus of their subsidiaries without receiving the amounts in any form. These manipulations resulted in paying dividends out of what technically appeared to be earnings but which was in reality capital.

Twelfth. Manipulations of system securities by the top holding company have involved large purchases of stock by the holding company or its subsidiaries in order to support the market. Such manipulations have for a time resulted in fictitious market values and in a deception of the public. The reports on the top companies in the Insull system reveal a tragic collapse following huge manipulations which were prompted by misguided judgment, false pride, and overreaching personal ambition. The Insull debacle is an example of a successful and trusted management of large affairs having been destroyed through the manipulations and speculations made possible by reason of the existence of the holding company and the temptation to use it.

Thirteenth. The holding company has been able to earn large profits through contracts between a subsidiary service company and the controlled operating companies. There is now a wide-spread movement to render these services at cost, but so long as there is no possible dealing at arm's length, so long as contracts are dictated by the holding company which controls both the service organization and the operating companies served, just that long will the public have reason to fear that the charges to the operating companies for services are unfair.

Fourteenth. A holding company lends itself to imposition upon subsidiary operating companies through contracts for purchases of fuel and other supplies from corporations also controlled by the holding company or in which the holding company or some of its officers and directors have an interest. There are instances of where fuel for the operating company cost the operating company more than twice as much as it could have been had in the open market.

Fifteenth. The holding company, through service contracts, is able to require a local operating company to pay $100 a day for the services of men who receive only $20 a day for the services rendered. Such an imposition is effected by having the operating company actually pay the $100 a day to experts performing the service. These experts, employees of the system holding company or its service subsidiary, turn the cash in to their company and receive their contractual wage of $6,000 or $7,000 a year.

Sixteenth. The holding company encourages financial houses as organizers and promoters to create companies and to encourage transactions profitable enough to the financial institutions but without justification in any resulting benefit to the utility companies involved. There are many instances of such organizers taking stocks at prices far below what they would bring on the market.

I am speaking here, and I hope your committee, when it brings in a bill here, will speak a little in the interest of the local communities.

Seventeenth. The directing holding company at the head of the system frequently makes improvident purchases of operating companies and carries the excessive price paid for operating properties into the consolidated balance sheet. Such improvidence may be due to misguided zeal in extending the sphere of influence of the system or to manipulations incident to cutting down income taxes or to the belief that an inflated capitalization can be carried into the valuation used as a rate base or to the desire of insiders to profit through a creation of a supply of securities to be thrust upon the speculative public. A startling instance is that of a holding company exchanging $37,000,000 of its stock for $1,000,000 of the stock of an operating company.

The whole country is aroused by this development of holding companies, and State governments stand helpless in the presence of these supercreatures. Whole States are served with power, with gas, with transportation by operating companies in the charge of employees who have no authority, no independence of judgment. They sometimes get good salaries, frequently they do not, and the rank and file of the employees are oftentimes underpaid. The people who complain of the high rates charged, or of the quality of the service, have to carry their complaints to the men who have no authority to act, who have to get on the telephone or write a letter to New York City, who are subject to removal by those in the top companies without notice, and who are frequently transferred from one part of the country to another. While the employees of these operating companies work without hope of promotion in blind alleys, while the users fret in vain over the prices charged or the quality of the service rendered, a few men in the top holding company enrich themselves and their families and favorites, flaunt their extravagance and make America a byword in the eyes of our neighboring countries by reason of the extravagance and vulgarity of these privileged people, sheltered by the most amazing legal edifice contrived in the history of mankind.

There is no absolute necessity for a holding company. Even the telephone industry, with a book value of $5,000,000,000 in one system, has at its head an operating company. It is true, there are economies in large-scale management of certain industries. One operating company owns the natural-gas pipe lines that reach from the Gulf coast of Texas, near Corpus Christi, across Louisiana to Birmingham, Ala. This company is called the United Public Service Co. It is an operating company. It has replaced a large number of corporations. It deals directly with the communities served along its line. It should be owned by the people in those communities, subject to the regulation of the States and municipalities it serves. Instead, it is owned by another company called the United Gas Corporation. This United Gas Corporation is a paper corporation which in turn is owned by Electric Bond & Share Co. The president and managers of the United Public Service Co. furnish all the talent, so far as judgment is concerned, for the direction of the company's operations. They should be free to set up their own service organization or to contract with the lowest bidder. They should not be forced to deal exclusively with subsidiaries of the Electric Bond & Share Co. The president of the operating company should not have to go to New York in order to make a decision with reference to his own company. He and the board of directors of his company should be in charge of that property. Instead, they are merely the tools of the board of directors and president of the Electric Bond & Share Co. There should be regional operating companies in the gas business, in electric-light and power business, and in most of these utilities where the extent of operations is limited by the state of the arts. The size of these regions will be determined by the development of the arts, by how far it is most economical to transport or transmit goods or energy.

A company like the Niagara Hudson Co., of New York, with many units in the same area served by the local companies in that limited area, can no doubt achieve great economies through a centralized operation of these plants which are so near to each other, but there is no point to placing that company under the control of some other holding company which is also trying to operate another group of plants in another State; much less justification is there for having some holding company to pick up odd plants here and there without rhyme or reason in several States and undertake to persuade investors that they have an arrangement which lends itself to the economies of large-scale operation.

If these holding companies are permitted to buy operating companies anywhere in the United States, it is inevitable that the people served by these companies will look to Congress to regulate these top holding companies. If the management of utilities which sell their services locally is to be subjected to some holding company in New York City, then the people of the country will turn to Washington for relief from the arbitrary decisions and the poor judgment of these self-appointed managers in the top holding companies. If we insist that the corporate entity shall coincide with the region or locality of most economical operations, as determined by the state of the arts, we can then leave to the States and to compacts of States the regulation of most of these utilities. We want you to consider whether or not the Congress should undertake to regulate these super-holding companies or lay down a policy under which they will disappear.

That is the problem first of myself and the 25 or 26 men who labor with me on this question.

They have issued bales of securities capitalizing the hope for profits. In an effort merely to regulate these companies utmost care must be used, lest by implication we put the stamp of approval upon all the stock-watering and unjustified inflation during the past 15 years.

Within a few days there will come from the Government Printing Office the remaining portions of the reports on this public-utility holding-company inquiry. I trust each Member will peruse with care the summaries with a view not only of getting an accurate picture of this tangled and expensive contrivance of the holding company but that they will also read the legal studies with a view to exploring how this Congress may, under our Constitution, discourage this cancerous growth on our body politic and remove it. It is a cancerous growth. If left alone, it will jeopardize all of our financial institutions and perhaps destroy the Republic. To remove it will cause some pain and a good deal of inconvenience to certain people, but it is better to subject a few to inconvenience than to leave in jeopardy the economic health and well-being of the entire country. The abuses of the holding company are indeed a major influence that brought on the great depression. Curtailing them and removing them is necessary to the recovery and to the future well-being and economic freedom of our people. [Applause.]

May I take just a moment before I yield to questions to say that in the Seventy-first Congress Mr. PARKER employed as counsel for our committee Dr. Walter M. W. Splawn, an ex-president of the University of Texas. This gentleman was made president of the university when he was 42 years of age. Before that he was a member of the Railroad Commission of the State of Texas.

I think every man who understands transportation or has made an understanding study of it will say that his investigation of the railroad holding company and the developments which he brought about is the most masterful document in that field that has yet been published. As you read his reports in these other fields of utilities you will find they are also masterly reports, and, speaking for the committee, and turning to some of my Republican colleagues whom I see over here, I think I may say that Dr. Splawn has the personal thanks of every member of the committee and should have the thanks of the entire Congress and the country for the diligent, patriotic, and masterful work that he has done. [Applause.]

I may say one other thing that is justified and repeat what Dr. Splawn said after he finished these investigations and his work in this connection before he went with the Interstate Commerce Commission, where I think he will do the same great work in that field which he has done in this. He paid this tribute to the committee, both majority and minority members. He had a pretty hard time getting some information. Some people said they were being pinched a little bit too hard and they were constituents of various members of the committee, but Dr. Splawn said:

> I want to pay the membership of this committee this tribute. Not a member of the committee during all of the investigations has ever come to the counsel for the committee and asked him to relieve any of their constituents from answering any questions or submitting any data that was called for.

This investigation made by him under the direction of your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was not made with a blare of trumpets. There were no public hearings, but in his own way he went to the books of every company in the United States, opened each and every one of them, and there, with his experts, worked out this story, not only of the railroad holding company but of the holding company in all other fields of utilities. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. If I am not mistaken, I understood the gentleman from Texas to say that gas pipe lines have heretofore not been regarded or considered as common carriers.

Mr. RAYBURN. They are not under the law.

Mr. MAY. And not having been made common carriers under the law, and required by law to accept for transportation gas of independent producers, I am wondering if the gentleman's committee made any inquiry into the existence of cases where independent consumers have been required to take a monopoly price or one fixed price for gas produced in order to get it transported, and in this way the major pipe-line companies have been able to control and regulate the price of the farmers' gas in many communities.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman means natural gas?

Mr. MAY. Yes; did you make any discoveries along that line?

Mr. RAYBURN. It may be embodied in the report somewhere. It has not been brought to my attention; but I may say this to the gentleman, and the same thing may be said about oil as well as gas: I was opposed last year, as everybody knows, to the Disney oil bill. I am not going to vote to make any one man dictator of the third largest industry in America, as was proposed in that bill. I am for the States, through compacts and through law, controlling the production of oil and its distribution if they can. I stand on the same footing with respect to natural gas, but if they cannot do it, then a higher authority must step in. Let me add this: Texas, of course, is the "devil" in the oil business. The east Texas field is what brought about all this talk of controlling the production of oil. There has been much said about "hot" oil. The State commission of Texas is trying to control this. The chairman of that commission is in the gallery here today, and he tells me that the State of Texas has control of the production and exportation of "hot" oil from that State; and in Texas, with an allowable of about 1,000,000 barrels, there was seeping out somewhere a little less than 15,000 barrels, which is infinitesimal compared with 1,000,000 barrels.

I did not intend to get on this subject, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to one thing about the oil business. The gentleman will find in the Cole report all the hearings and a sane report made by five as sane men as were ever appointed on a subcommittee to make any investigation by this Congress.

Mr. MAY. What I wanted to bring out was that some of these pipe lines have been controlling the price in the communities they control by reason of having a monopoly, because they are not common carriers.

Mr. RAYBURN. Some of these days I am going to talk about pipe lines and the divorcement of them and what you are going to have to do if you divorce them. [Applause.]

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3410, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. PARSONS in the chair.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "namely" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and that so much as may be necessary is hereby appropriated for the payment, effective January 1, 1935, to all officers and employees of the Federal Government of the United States of full compensation without regard to the 5-percent reduction now in force."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order because it is not germane and because it affects the salaries of officers and employees who are not provided for in this bill, and also that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the further point of order that it is a change of existing law and not authorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, my amendment merely increases the amount of money to be appropriated in this bill by a little more than $30,000,000.

The increase carried in my amendment would provide the money to carry out the dictum and the theory of the President himself 6 months early. Such action is quite proper and fitting at this time, inasmuch as the Congress discredited the so-called "cost of living" theory when it restored two-thirds of the pay cut last year.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the gentleman from Michigan is not discussing the point of order but the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. McLEOD. I merely repeat, Mr. Chairman, that this is only an increase in the appropriation as set up in the bill providing for the salary increases which are also contained in the bill and will amount to about $30,000,000.

In addition, the President himself, in his Budget message, repudiated the present set-up for continuing the pay cut when he declared that it was not proposed to continue the 5-percent reduction after July 1, 1935, even though the index figure of the cost of living now indicates that such restorations in all probability would not even be justified for some time after that date.

Living expenses have greatly increased due to acts of the administration and Congress. The 5-percent decrease, or penalty of reduction, of salaries of Federal employees, inequitably and improperly made, was also the act of the administration and Congress.

When the President and we, the Congress, openly admit by official acts and statements that due to conditions that the President and Congress are responsible for, we must not penalize Federal employees by maintaining this 5-percent decrease in pay any longer than next July, I contend no further argument is necessary. Our obligation and duty is clearly defined. Let us assist in the fight for recovery and not retard it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Rule XXI, clause 2, sentence 2, of the House of Representatives provides:

> Nor shall any provision in any such [appropriation] bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of any compensation paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan seeks to not only increase the compensation of the officers and employees of the Federal Government provided for in the pending bill, but also seeks to increase the salaries and compensation of all the employees of the Federal Government, and in the opinion of the Chair is not germane. The amendment increases appropriations in the bill and does not retrench expenditures at all.

In addition to that, the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment contains legislative matter and is therefore subject to that point of order. The amendment being in violation of this rule, the Chair therefore is constrained to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Contingent expenses: For contingent expenses of the Executive Office, including stationery, record books, telegrams, telephones, books for library, furniture and carpets for offices, automobiles, expenses of garage, including labor, special services, and miscellaneous items, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $50,350.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: On page 2, line 21, after the sum "$50,350" and before the period insert, "of which $5,000 shall be immediately available."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment I might say that it merely makes $5,000 of the contingent fund of the President immediately available.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain the reason for that?

Mr. WOODRUM. The reason is that they need $5,000 before the 1st of July.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION

> For every exenditure requisite for or incident to the work of the American Battle Monuments Commission authorized by the act of March 4, 1923 (U. S. C., title 36, secs. 121–133), and by Executive Order No. 6614 of February 26, 1934, including the acquisition of land or interest in land in foreign countries for carrying out the purposes of said act and Executive order without submission to the Attorney General of the United States under the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 520); title 40, sec. 255); employment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses; rent of office space in foreign countries; the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles which may be furnished to the Commission by other departments of the Government or acquired by purchase; printing, binding, engraving, lithographing, photographing, and typewriting, including the publication of information concerning the American activities, battlefields, memorials, and cemeteries in Europe; the purchase of maps, textbooks, newspapers, and periodicals, $199,059: Provided, That notwithstanding the requirements of existing laws or regulations, and under such terms and conditions as the Commission may in its discretion deem necessary and proper, the Commission may contract for work in Europe and engage, by contract or otherwise, the services of architects, firms of architects, and other technical and professional personnel: Provided further, That the Commission may purchase supplies and materials without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $500: Provided further, That when traveling on business of the Commission officers of the Army serving as members or as secretary of the Commission may be reimbursed for expenses as provided for civilian members of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission may delegate to its chairman, secretary, or officials in charge of either its Washington or Paris offices, under such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, such of its authority as it may deem necessary and proper.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform us the reason for the proviso with reference to the hiring of architects?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the Battle Monuments Commission is a Commission constituted under authority of Congress, as the gentleman knows, to erect monuments and memorials in the American cemeteries in Europe. That language authorizing the employment of architects and to make contracts is language that has always been carried in that appropriation. Under Executive order they are charged with the duty of repairing and the maintenance of those cemeteries, and the language is needed for the purpose, if there should be repairs and alterations, of giving them authority to do it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will this give them authority to hire foreign architects and foreign artists in connection with this work?

Mr. WOODRUM. It gives them the same authority they have always had since they have been erecting these monuments.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is this new legislation with reference to that authority?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not at all. It is the same legislation that we have always carried for the Battle Monuments Commission.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to reserve the point of order pending an explanation of the provision on page 4, beginning with line 17:

That the Commission may purchase supplies and materials without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $500.

I see that that same authority has been delegated to a number of these independent boards, giving them authority to purchase not to exceed $50 irrespective of a certain chapter in the United States laws, ostensibly because certain economies could be effected. This provision calls for $500 instead of $50, as compared with the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and some of the other boards and commissions. It seems to me that it is giving them considerable authority to purchase up to $500 of supplies or to incur a bill for services up to and including $500 without having advertised for bids. Was that a misprint, or is it there intentionally?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is not a misprint. This is an activity in a foreign country, and the board presided over by General Pershing requested that authority of the Bureau of the Budget and made a showing that convinced the Budget Bureau and our committee that it was in the interest of efficiency and economy to give them some latitude in handling the purchase of supplies and materials for these foreign activities. That is a greater amount than we carry for our own bureaus and departments each year, but it is for a foreign activity, its purpose being to get rid of the red tape and delay caused by calling for bids over there for relatively small activities. It seems to me that it is desirable.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And in that connection I might inquire, insofar as the $50 provision is concerned with reference to the other boards, whether that will apply to the field and the branch offices of these boards?

Mr. WOODRUM. This applies to foreign countries.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But as far as the $50 authority is concerned, that is a matter that has come up a good deal this summer, where use was made of that authority in buying supplies.

Mr. WOODRUM. It gives purchasing authority to the board, and the right to contract up to $50.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then there is the delegation of authority on page 5, where the Commission is authorized to delegate all of its authority to the chairman or secretary or officials engaged either here or in foreign countries. That seems to be a rather broad delegation of authority, provided it involves also authority to make expenditures.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is a broad delegation of authority, and again, this is an unusual activity. The chairman is sometimes in America and sometimes in Europe, and sometimes in different parts of this country. General Pershing is the honorary chairman of the Commission, and it seems to me necessary to give him that authority in order to carry out properly the activities of the Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all printing and binding for the Civil Service Commission, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington and elsewhere, $75,000, of which not to exceed $20,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: On page 7, line 23, after the sum of "$75,000" but before the comma, strike out the remainder of the paragraph except the period.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment is to eliminate the language that was carried last year, making $20,000 of this fund immediately available. It was not necessary to carry it this year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Employees' Compensation Commission, $4,719,000.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to get some information from the chairman of the subcommittee. Is it under this act that the Compensation Board is permitted to pay for the destruction of property by members of the Civilian Conservation Corps?

Mr. WOODRUM. This act deals solely with injuries to employees of the Government; members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, of course. It has nothing to do with any property damage.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Nor with injuries to citizens?

Mr. WOODRUM. No, sir.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. At this moment I just want to take a little of the time of the House. I do not know at this time what committee of the House has jurisdiction. I have been advised that under the Conservation Act the Government will pay for the destruction of property by the C. C. C. boys, but it will not pay anything for injuries done to citizens. Quite a number of those cases have taken place in my district within the last year, and in one case particularly one of the young fellows, it was said, was intoxicated and was driving a truck on a rainy day at some 65 miles an hour. He came around a curve and struck an automobile driven by a citizen and caused a concussion of his brain and rendered helpless for life the other two persons in the automobile.

I took the matter up with the proper authorities of the Government and they assured me that the Government would pay the reasonable market value of the automobile, which was $200; but they had no authority to make any settlement for any injury to these three citizens.

It seems to me that the committee having authority to write the law in this matter should amend the law. One of those men was a railroad man engaged in the operating department of the railroad. He had a family. He is permanently and totally disabled. The other two men were farmers, and they are in the same condition. Now, it seems to me that if one of the Government's servants is drunk and negligent and does that kind of an injury to a citizen there should be some redress, more than simply taking care of an old automobile.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman will recall doubtless that the redress usually is by a private bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But the gentleman from Kentucky, having served for nearly 12 years in this House, knows that method of redress does not mean anything, scarcely.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is hard to get it through, of course.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It is almost impossible to get them through.

Now, I spoke of one instance. There are three or four other instances which have occurred within my district in the past year.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman, through his long service here, knows that this is an appropriation bill coming from an appropriations committee, and it is simply to carry out what the Congress has authorized to be done by legislation.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. BLANTON. The matters which the gentleman speaks of are matters which require adjudication to determine liability and the amount of damage, and not matters of appropriation which this committee can handle.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Oh, I said the committee of this House which has jurisdiction of the matter. I am simply calling the attention of the Members of the House and of that committee to the fact that it seems to me that this law should be amended to take care of injuries to such persons in these cases.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] with respect to this particular section dealing with compensation for the emergency employees in the Civilian Conservation Corps? My experience in the last 3 or 4 months has been that a number of very aggravated cases have come to attention, which were submitted to the Board. They have been pending now for a long time, and there seems to be a very decided reluctance on the part of the administrative board to do anything for them.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman means the Compensation Commission?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. If those boys who are working in the Civilian Conservation Corps are injured, they should be taken care of. There are cases where hernias have been incurred through heavy lifting, and the men can get no hospitalization or compensation whatever. I have been wondering if the amount appropriated is adequate or whether the lack of funds is the reason for the reluctance on the part of the Board to do anything for them.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is not on account of lack of funds. Of course, the Congress has already authorized the fund. This is simply appropriating money that has already been authorized.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then there is no reason why they should not dispose of these meritorious cases without delay?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not because of lack of funds.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman know, off hand, how many of those cases are in hospitals at the present time, how many of them have been disabled, and how many death claims have been paid? Perhaps the gentleman covered that during my absence from the Chamber, and if so, the RECORD will disclose it, but if he has the figures available I would appreciate it very much if he would give them to me at this time.

Mr. WOODRUM. A total of 10,556 cases was reported to October 31, 1934, which does not include a far greater number of cases where the duration of disability was less than 15 days. There were 941 death cases, but only 330 have been allowed. So the gentleman will see there has been quite a large number of cases, which has greatly increased the administrative work of this Compensation Commission.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But the amount appropriated is adequate for all purposes?

Mr. WOODRUM. The amount appropriated is adequate for all purposes, in our judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

For seven commissioners, and for all other authorized expenditures of the Federal Communications Commission in performing the duties imposed by the Communications Act of 1934, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 1064), the Ship Act of 1910, approved June 24, 1910, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 484–487), the International Radiotelegraphic Convention (45 Stat., pt. 2, p. 2760), and Executive Order No. 3513, dated July 9, 1921, as amended under date of June 30, 1934, relating to applications for submarine cable licenses, including personal services, contract stenographic reporting services, rental of quarters, newspapers, periodicals, reference books, law books, special counsel fees, supplies and equipment, including purchase and exchange of instruments, which may be purchased without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $25, improvement and care of grounds and repairs to buildings, not to exceed $5,000, traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings which in the discretion of the Commission are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities, and other necessary expenses, $1,500,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,060,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 11, line 18, after the first comma, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I view with great alarm the increasing volume of Federal employees. I view with great alarm the increasing amounts we are being asked to pay for commissions of one kind and another. This particular Commission has come before us asking for $1,500,000, where the requirements for the current year were $651,885. I have not before me the increase that was accomplished for this particular fiscal year, but the requirements here set forth for employees run 408 in the departmental force. This represents an increase of 100 percent in the number of employees. It runs just the same force in the field.

The requirement in funds for employees in the District is $1,059,000, or an average for every one of these employees of a little better than $2,500. For salaries in the field it aggregates $291,000 for 111 employees, or an average of approximately $2,800 per employee, and many of these employees are clerks and stenographers.

The work of this Commission involves, as I understand, amongst other things a valuation of properties. We attempted that in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to the railroads, and we got to the point where the statistics were practically valueless and we had to stop the operation. I hate to see the Government embarking upon this large new activity. I hate to see the expenses of the Government piling up for a new activity, because when we start them we are never able to reduce the number of commissions and we are never able to reduce the expenses of the commissions. Is it not time we stopped some of these things?

I have offered a very modest amendment to cut this appropriation 20 percent. I do not want to reduce them in funds that are legitimately necessary for carrying on the activities and responsibilities with which they have been entrusted, but I hate to see the appropriation increased 150 percent over the appropriation of last year and the number of employees in the District more than doubled, with the same ratio of increased expenses in the District. It seems to me we can give them this cut of 20 percent in their expenditures and still be affording them more than ample funds with which to operate. Having all this in mind I have offered this amendment to reduce the appropriation for this activity from $1,500,000 to $1,200,000, and I hope the Committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the Communications Act of 1934 abolished the Radio Commission and set up in its stead the Federal Communications Commission, a Commission which assumed not only the duties of the Radio Commission but which was given the added duties of regulating telephonic, telegraphic, and cable communications, and also rate-making powers with respect to these activities, which duty will perhaps involve the valuation of these properties.

I do not think it is fair to say that the amount carried in this bill is an increase over the appropriation of last year by the amount of money represented by the difference between the two sums, because the activities are entirely different and very much greater.

I join the gentleman from New York in decrying any indication of unnecessarily expanding these governmental departments and bureaus, and that is the unanimous sentiment of my subcommittee; but taking into account the very important, the highly important, duties imposed upon this Commission so far as the American people are concerned, that of regulating rates, and services of communications and facilities, and regulating, licensing, and policing the use of radio communication, the committee felt the amount allowed by the Bureau of the Budget was proper. I hope the Committee will ratify the action of the subcommittee and of the Appropriations Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a divison (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 29, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

For salaries and expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, including printing and binding, $264,043: Provided, That expenditures from this appropriation shall not exceed the amounts collected and deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts from assessments upon the Federal home-loan banks.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: On page 12 of the bill, strike out lines 2 to 7, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For salaries and expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, including personal services in the District of Columbia, printing and binding, traveling expenses, rents, furniture and equipment, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, maps, contract stenographic reporting services, telephone and telegraphic services, and all other necessary expenses of the Board, $264,043: Provided, That expenditures from this appropriation shall not exceed the amounts collected and deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts from assessments upon the Federal home-loan banks."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the difference in the language, may I say when the language as contained in the printed bill was sent up by the Bureau of the Budget, the Home Loan Bank Board and the Budget were under the impression that the Board had authority under the law to expend their funds for the specific purposes set out in this new language. The new language does not in any way change the appropriation. It merely outlines the purpose for which the money may be spent. The $264,000 is merely reappropriated out of funds that have been paid into the Treasury by fees from the member banks.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Have they been spending money for this purpose in the past?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is nothing new?

Mr. WOODRUM. Nothing new whatever.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does their salary come out of this appropriation? The word "expenses" includes their salaries? The $264,000 is the item out of which the members of the Board get their salaries?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Does this amount anticipate the expansion or extension of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation by a new appropriation of money?

Mr. WOODRUM. This does not affect the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This is the Home Loan Bank Board, the parent board.

Mr. DONDERO. Does that Board have charge of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation business?

Mr. WOODRUM. It does; yes.

Mr. DONDERO. If the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is expanded or extended by a new appropriation of money and new business added, will that increase the expense or will this take care of the matter?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think this will affect the expense at all. It will affect the expenses of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation through its regional offices.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Board serves in a dual capacity and receives no money whatsoever for its second office?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. I move to strike out the amount "$264,043" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$1."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: "In the Woodrum amendment strike out '$264,043' and insert in lieu thereof '$1.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to move to strike out this paragraph, but that is not possible, since the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has offered his amendment, because after the vote is taken on his amendment, then, from a parliamentary standpoint, a motion to strike out the whole paragraph would not be in order.

Mr. Chairman, I am just as much in favor of a proper Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the relief that it is presumed to afford our people back home as any man in Congress or in the United States. I was just as strong an advocate of that proposition when we passed it as any man in the Nation. I helped to support it; I helped to pass it and helped to cause this Board and Corporation to be created and formed. I was in favor of appropriating and helped to appropriate the money that made up its capital stock, several hundred million dollars of the people's tax money. I was in favor of the proposal that authorized that Corporation to pledge the credit of your country and mine to the extent of $2,000,000,000 of bonds, and the credit of this Government has been pledged to that amount, for we have guaranteed those bonds.

I am in favor of continuing that relief to the people suffering throughout the land, whose homes have been threatened with foreclosure, and thousands of whose homes have already been foreclosed and taken away from them since this Corporation has been pretending to function.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have only 5 minutes, otherwise I would gladly yield. I do not want to take up too much time of the Committee.

If you will look at pages 360 and 361 of the new Congressional Directory, it will be seen that the officers of this Federal Home Loan Bank Board are identically the same men who form the officers of this Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They are the same men; they are one and the same, and they are the ones who took this several hundred million dollars of public money out of the people's Treasury for their capital stock. They are the ones who took over the credit of the United States to the extent of $2,000,000,000 for their bonds.

They are the ones who have been appointing their own numerous high-salaried private appraisers sent out from their home offices. They are the ones who let you and me appoint a local appraiser in each county and then paid no attention to him. They are the ones who sent to Dun & Bradstreet to get a private commercial report on some poor washerwoman in your district who needed a small loan to save her little home, and whom the commercial reporting agency never heard of before and could not get an accurate report on in any event. They are the ones who have been delaying the applications that were filed in the fall of 1933 and held up and pigeonholed for months and months and shunted aside with red-tape delays all of the year 1934, and now the applicants are notified that they will not consider any more applications because they have not reached their legal department. They are the ones who have shiftlessly allowed mortgages to foreclose and take thousands of homes from deserving Americans during the last 12 months.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am in hopes the Chairman will give me a little more time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They are the ones also that have been tipping off the building-and-loan companies in advance to the good homes so that they may foreclose before the loans can be passed through the Corporation.

Mr. BLANTON. I would not go that far, but I know that they have been taking care of many friendly institutions.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In support of the contention of the gentleman from Texas, that needless delays have been prevalent, I would like to say that in my district there was an application filed in November of 1933 for a loan amounting to $4,000 upon property that was worth $15,000. They told me at the Washington office this morning, after 14 months' time, that they will expedite the matter. That is but one of hundreds of such cases, bringing not needed relief but tragedy and despair to honest home owners.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes so I may yield for questions.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I gave the gentleman a lot of time yesterday——

Mr. BLANTON. For which I am deeply grateful to my friend. I am depending on the usual graciousness of the gentleman from Virginia. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I observe that I do not yield to the gentleman from Texas insofar as my solicitude for these home owners is concerned, but, precisely, how are you going to translate your solicitude for their relief into action by merely chopping off the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, whose first function is to administer the 3,500 building-and-loan associations who are members of the Federal Savings and Loan Board and the Federal Home Loan Board?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman in four words. It is psychological discipline. [Laughter and applause.]

There is but one way for you to let this autocratic, arrogant Board down here understand that there is a House of Representatives here whose Members are elected every 2 years by the people and sent here to look after the rights of the people, and to let them know that when they override the rights of the people they are going to hear from the men on the hill. [Applause.]

I know well our good friend from Roanoke [Mr. WOODRUM]. There is not a finer man in this entire Congress. There is no Member abler or more valuable. He is one of the most loyal administration men you ever heard of. And so am I. But he is chairman of this committee. This is his bill. It is his duty to protect appropriations in this bill for the administration family, and he thinks that he is bound to protect every little bureau in Washington, and that it is his duty to protect them. It is his duty to protect this bill, and it is my duty to help him protect it. And I do help him protect it. You try to put something in this bill that increases appropriations or add legislation that is not in order and see how quickly I shall help him protect his bill by making a point of order. Naturally, he is going to have to vote against us when deep down in his heart I know he feels just like I do, and down deep in his heart he would like to pick these fellows up and spank them just like I would like to pick them up and spank them.

Now, we have but one way to let them understand that they must carry out the purpose, intent, and will of Congress and must look to Congress for their activities and the scope and manner in which they may handle their business, and that is to cut off their pay when they do not behave; and, if you take this salary money away from them, even though they may come down here and assure us they will do right in the future and we may put it back when we get that assurance from them, you will find it will influence them to give us such assurance. It will have a splendid effect on them. Then we will put it back. [Applause.] You take this $264,000 away from them and let them crawl on their bellies up to the Senate, and you will see them change their arrogant ideas immediately. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Why does not the very hard-working, distinguished gentleman from Texas request his imperious leader in the White House to discharge the present Board and appoint a new one?

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell you what I believe we ought to do if they do not change their modus operandi. I am going to vote when the time comes to provide another $1,000,000,000 to save the homes of worthy Americans. There must be some means of relief for the thousands of worthy home owners who are now losing their homes in all parts of the United States, and I am going to vote to do that, but I want proper men to administer it. I want these men down here to change their autocratic, listless, inefficient way of handling public business, and if they do not change I am going to be one of those who are going to ask the President of the United States to remove them from office, every one of them. And then, if the President does not remove them, I am going to exercise my prerogative, on my responsibility as a Member of this Congress, to come here on this floor and impeach them for their high crimes and misdemeanors and the way they have been mismanaging the people's business. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Old men do not change their ways; you must change the men.

Mr. BLANTON. If you want to change them right quickly, just take their $264,000 salaries away. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, they say they are not amenable to Congress. They say that you have no control over them because they are a corporation. Why do their names appear here in our Congressional Directory as Government institutions, and why do their salaries come through this bill, the first bill that is passed in the Seventy-fourth Congress, appropriating $264,000 to pay their salaries?

Let us outvote Clif this time. He will not mind it. He will pat us on the back when he gets out of here. [Laughter.] Oh, when he takes the floor to answer me he will give me the devil here directly and say I ought not to do this, but for the moment let us take this $264,000 out and then you are going to see a change of heart. You will have every one of these fellows up here taking a front seat on the mourners' bench and you will find hereafter that when we go down there with a meritorious case they will look into it.

They will not treat you like they did our good friend from Cleveland [Mr. SWEENEY] when he went down there and asked them to show him the record in a case from his district and was told in an autocratic way that that was something he could not see as a Member of Congress.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. He was also told it might embarrass the bankers to have the information given out.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. But our colleague [Mr. SWEENEY] told them enough that in less than an hour they showed him what he went there to see.

You have got to show these bureau chiefs that they must respond to the Representatives in Congress. [Applause.]

Here is the way to make them pay attention to you—let us strike this $264,000 salary item out, and we will ultimately furnish plenty of money for salaries and expenses for the right kind of officials and the right sort of an organization. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment carried almost unanimously.

Mr. WOODRUM. I was on my feet asking for recognition when the Chair put the question. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has the right to be heard, although my amendment passed by almost a unanimous vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the vote on the amendment will be vacated, and the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the good humor and the spirit of revelry that pervades the House of Representatives, but I have seen this body in that mood when we all feel good and happy over a witty speech like that by the irresistible gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and I have also seen this body in that mood do some ridiculous things.

The gentleman from Texas is peeved at the Home Loan Bank Board because they did not appoint some appraiser for him.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. They appointed the 19 appraisers and the 19 county attorneys I selected for my 19 counties. They boycotted one appraiser wholly without cause. I am after them because of their delays, their inefficiency, their incompetency, their arrogancy, and injustices.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not yield to the gentleman. He must either sit down and listen to me or go outside. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Texas is peeved because the Board did not make loans that he thought ought to be made. I am willing to grant that they treated him badly in both instances, but in the next breath he says he is willing to give them another billion dollars. What would be the use of that if you do not give them a loan board to administer that fund? That is not the way to discipline the Home Loan Bank Board. The way is to lay down rules and regulations as to the way the Board shall operate. We have got to have a Home Loan Bank Board or some other board to relieve the stricken home owners of this country. How can you stand up here and vote to take away the Board so they cannot administer the funds that they now have? It is a ridiculous, silly, and childlike proposal. Let us proceed in a regular and orderly way.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Cannot we find enough dollar-a-year men to take their place?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; you could not find dollar-a-year men to take their place. It is a highly important work, and we need this Board to operate. We have a right, and it is our duty, to compel them to carry out the will of Congress; but withholding the appropriation is not going to do it. We know perfectly well that the country would laugh at this body for doing that, and the other body of Congress would immediately reinstate it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. It was brought out in debate here yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] that this Board, under its regulations, has provided enough for overhead in the difference between the rate of interest they charge their patrons and that which they have to pay on their bonds. In that way they get enough to pay the overhead of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I think we ought to let them spend their own money for a while and see how they get along with it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And does not the gentleman think that the debate has served the purpose which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] intended it to serve?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am quite confident it has.

Mr. BLANTON. And I am about willing to admit that since the gentleman from Virginia said it is our duty to compel them to carry out the will of Congress——

Mr. MICHENER. And that was the only purpose of the gentleman from Texas in bringing the matter to the attention of the country. He did it with no expectation on his part that his amendment would prevail.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure that that is a fact.

Mr. BLANTON. It will accomplish good whether it prevails or not.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman from Texas will receive box-car headlines this afternoon and tomorrow for his spanking of the board, and I am quite sure that he will be highly delighted.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman from Virginia knows that no newspaper in Washington mentions my name, or any work I do here, except to criticize me, and that does not deter or bother me one bit. But it is a fact that this Federal Home Loan Bank Board is going to learn that practically every Member here is dissatisfied with its delays and incompetency, even though we may still provide for their salaries in this bill. Remember that this Board has all the money it needs until July 1. This money that we are now appropriating is not available until July 1. This bill does not provide any money for it until next July. We are now appropriating for the fiscal year of 1936. The Board has all it wants until July 1, and before the Senate would put this salary item back the gentleman will find a lot of psychological good has been accomplished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that my good friend, the philosopher from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], has administered psychological discipline to some agency of the Government. It was done a number of times, I think, in the course of the Seventy-third Congress. But I still insist that this amendment to the amendment is nothing but a grand futility and is not going to accomplish what the gentleman from Texas has in mind. The gentleman from Texas will bear me out that I was one of those in the Seventy-third Congress who stripped the hide from this Home Owners' Loan Corporation, for we had the filthiest mess in the State of Illinois that the mind of man could conceive.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. And I came on the floor in conjunction with Mr. YOUNG and began to tear the mask from this thing and dispose of that filthy mess and the chicanery of some of those officials. I came to Washington specially this last summer to air abuses in the H. O. L. C., and had the present chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Board refer to me in anything but a complimentary way. So I hold no brief for this Board. This amendment, however, is not the way to get to it. After all, this money is but a reappropriation of a fund that constitutes an assessment upon some 3,100 building-and-loan associations that are members of the Federal Home Loan Board, and so this is, for all practical purposes, their money. Therefore you are not only not going psychologically to discipline this Board, but you are going to destroy the efforts of the building-and-loan structure in this country and all the building-and-loan associations shall contribute to this fund; and so I say that while I have no brief for this Board, you do not serve your constituents, you do not do a bit of good to effect further relief for the home owners of this country in their distress by passing this futile kind of an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, and I hope you will vote it down.

Certainly I am not satisfied with the manner in which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been administered. First of all, the State of Illinois has thus far received far less than its proportionate share of the money and bonds appropriated to relieve distressed home owners. Secondly, there was such undue emphasis upon the immediate ability of the applicant to repay the money borrowed, without regard for his prospective or future capacity to pay, that the very folks who needed loans could not procure them.

The Congress, in enacting the Home Owners' Loan Act, had in mind the distressed folks who had been foreclosed or who were in immediate danger of foreclosure, the folks who were unemployed and could not pay building-and-loan or mortgage installments, the folks whose credit rating by virtue of adversity born of the depression had been impaired.

Yet, the maze of regulations invoked by the H. O. L. C. made it possible for those applicants to procure loans who were not in the direst need and denied relief to those who were. By virtue of the multiplicity of regulations devised for the guidance of branch and regional offices, the person who made application for a loan had to show an earning power sufficient to meet the monthly installments on the mortgage, had to show a favorable credit rating, and for all practical purposes had to show those things which would easily have qualified such applicant for a loan from any lending institution. The H. O. L. C. has therefore shot wide of its mark and left thousands of people in despair and without relief.

I am deeply sensible of the needs of the home owners in Illinois and know the pathos and tragedy that has been the lot of many. This Congress cannot now abandon them to their despair. It cannot disappoint the home owners who are still hoping for relief, and I join with the distinguished Member from Texas in that regard.

However, to cut this appropriation to $1 and seek thereby to extinguish this Board would only imperil the operations of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which in its capacity as an administrator of the system for advancing money to private building-and-loan associations is altogether different from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as such.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BULWINKLE). The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment, together with the amendment to the amendment, be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the Woodrum amendment and the Blanton amendment to the Woodrum amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 28, noes 127.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Federal Power Commission, $312,600.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Undoubtedly every Congressman in the United States has received letters from his constituents telling him that they are losing their homes; that they had made application to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for a loan and that their applications had been rejected. I know there is not a Congressman in the United States who has not made a gigantic effort to help his unfortunate constituents. When the home owners' loan bill was enacted into law, it was intended to give relief to people who were losing their homes. If the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is not going to take care of the unfortunates who make application for a loan and who are unemployed, then show me where it is a relief measure.

While I was in Pittsburgh, people came to my office and said, "Mr. DUNN, I cannot get a loan. The reason they will not give me a loan is because I cannot guarantee that I will be able to pay the principal and interest." I believe it is the duty of the Federal Government to make it possible for every person to obtain a loan from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation who is in danger of losing his property, regardless of whether he can guarantee that he will be able to pay the principal and interest. It is not a relief measure unless we save the homes of the unemployed. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Emergency boards: For expenses of emergency boards appointed by the President to investigate and report respecting disputes between carriers and their employees, as authorized by section 10, Railway Labor Act, approved May 20, 1926 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 45, sec. 154), $25,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation available for this purpose for the fiscal year 1935.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] had an amendment which he desired to offer in connection with the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, on page 20. I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: On page 20, in line 14, strike out "$820,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$707,792."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] for his courtesy in permitting me to return to this paragraph.

I do not desire the House to assume for a moment any hostility on my part toward the progress of this country in the improvement of our air force or the development of aeronautics in the United States, as quite the contrary is the case, but there are a few things involved in this particular section that I desire to discuss briefly.

It will be noticed on page 9 of the report, under the heading of salaries and general expenses, the bill carries for this activity the Budget estimate of $820,800, an increase of $113,008 above the current appropriation. It is that increase that I seek to strike out.

Now, quoting a little further from the report, I find this statement:

Seventeen thousand dollars is for additional electricity to operate new equipment which has been provided under an allotment of Public Works Administration funds.

And so forth, detailing the various items, and at the bottom of that statement:

Including $29,500 for the construction of models for experimental purposes.

Now, in the first place, there is some doubt in my mind as to the manner in which this particular set-up has been functioning. I have fairly reliable information to the effect that some of the members of that particular group have been touring the continent of Europe on a trip which, to my mind, is entirely unnecessary when the taxpayers are paying the bill. At least, the action is a bit ill-advised at this particular time.

Furthermore, I desire to point out to the Congress that we have already a Bureau of Air Commerce under the head of the United States Department of Commerce. We also have certain experimental propositions in operation in the War Department and in the Navy Department, where we should be accomplishing some of the same things. If not, then let us consolidate all these functions for the sake of results and economy. If the set-up, presumably for the improvement of our air defense, has been successful to a marked degree, enough to justify the appropriation, then why the hue and cry of a year ago that the Army could not carry the mail? Has some private enterprise been profiting to the exclusion of the taxpayers, lo, these many years? There is a strange inconsistency of thought here, in which I seem to see the hand of what I once before styled the "Air Trust."

This constitutes one of the reasons why we should move cautiously before we permit this particular set-up to become a growing burden of expense to the taxpayers, if we are not going to get the proper results. The first thing we know there will be a claim made that it is quite a fundamental organization of our Government, a great necessity to our aeronautical progress, and still discover our air forces unable to function in an emergency.

I also desire to call attention to the section referring to the appropriation to operate equipment purchased with P. W. A. funds that this Congress has never had an opportunity to authorize for that particular purpose. I object to the policy of the P. W. A. purchasing materials of that kind and then coming to the Congress with an apparent club over our heads and asking funds to use in the operation of that equipment that we did not authorize. I believe we are setting up a bad precedent when we attempt to progress along those lines. It is upon the basis of these contentions that I ask the Congress to strike out only the increase of $113,008 from this particular appropriation.

I thank the gentleman from Virginia for his courtesy.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is already, and has been since its inception, a fundamental necessity, in my judgment, for the orderly progress of aviation in this country. If time permitted, I could bring this Committee, I believe, very convincing proof of the fact that it has actually saved to the Government of the United States, to its aviation branches in the Army and Navy, in actual dollars more than it has ever expended in this great research activity, to say nothing of its vast contributions to the development of aviation from the standpoint of increased speed, increased safety, and reduced cost.

There is no duplication whatever in the work that this Committee does and that of the air services of the Army and Navy, and such work as may be done by the Bureau of Standards. That matter has been inquired into a number of times by succeeding administrations. The National Advisory Committee is the research and experimental activity of the Government, headed by Dr. Ames, president of the Johns Hopkins University, with an advisory committee of such distinguished men as Colonel Lindbergh and other noted aviators, who serve without pay. They take no junkets and have spent no money of the Government. They are allowed actual traveling expenses.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. Is it not true that the chairman of this committee spent several months in Europe during the past summer?

Mr. WOODRUM. Does the gentleman refer to Dr. Ames?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Perhaps he did, but I do not think it was at the expense of the Government; but if he did, I believe the people of America who know Dr. Ames, president of the Johns Hopkins University, and those who have followed the proceedings before this committee, and who know of his wonderful service to this country in aviation, would say that it was money well spent if he did take such a trip to investigate what was being done in other countries with regard to aviation. However, a part of the very small increase is to restore salaries to the 100-percent basis.

A small portion of it is to equip necessary added facilities that were granted to this activity by the Public Works Administration.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to consume the time of the Committee further, because we are extremely anxious to finish this bill this afternoon. I hope, however, the Committee will follow the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee and pass this appropriation just as recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all printing and binding for the Securities and Exchange Commission, $30,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 24, line 10, strike out "$1,649,244" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000,000."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, in introducing this amendment, which increases the amount carried in the bill, I may say that the Budget estimate for the Securities Exchange Commission was $2,300,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may offer an amendment to his amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield for that purpose, but do not yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL to the amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Strike out "$1,649,244" in line 10, on page 24, and insert in lieu thereof "$2,340,000", and in line 18, after the word "Commission"——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting the reading of the amendment). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he may offer his amendment as a substitute amendment but not as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HULL. I accept the suggestion of the Chair and offer my amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will further state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that in the reading of the bill the Clerk has not read the portion of the bill to which the latter part of the gentleman's amendment would apply.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the Budget estimate for the Securities Exchange Commission was $2,300,000. The committee cut it to $1,800,000 and made a further cut which reduced it to $1,649,244 for reasons set out in the report, not that the committee was not sympathetic with the very important work laid out by this Commission or that it lacked appreciation of the very splendid gentleman at the head of the Commission; but it felt that there were evidences of a too-rapid growth and an unnecessarily rapid expansion in this Department. We felt that the Bureau ought to be a little more conservative in its request.

Since this report was made to the Congress and on last Thursday a further hearing on deficiencies was had before the Appropriations Committee and the matter was gone into very carefully. While I still feel that the original Budget estimate was high, certainly high for the first year's activity of this Commission, it is true perhaps that the committee's action in cutting the fund to $1,649,000 was a little drastic and might result in preventing some of the very able and necessary field work the Securities Exchange Commission must do if they are to carry out the important duties assigned to them. I have conferred with the Chairman of this Commission. I have conferred with the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, who brought in the organic bill creating this Commission. In my judgment, the amount asked in this amendment for the next fiscal year will give them ample funds with which to expand in an orderly way; and I think, too, that we may reasonably expect an efficient and helpful administration of this act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. How much of an increase above the committee's allowance does this new figure represent?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is an increase of about $300,000 above the committee's figures, and it is a decrease under the Budget estimate of about $300,000.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I care to say upon the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I preface my remarks in support of my amendment by stating that I am not as fully informed of the activities of the Securities Exchange Commission as is the chairman of this subcommittee. I am offering this amendment for the reason that this Commission appeared before the Bureau of the Budget and asked for an appropriation of $4,000,000. They came before this subcommittee and asked for $2,340,000 and explained that the nature of their work required that much at least in order that they might broaden their plans and carry on their investigation of securities—not only of the stock exchanges, of which there were some 29 mentioned, not only of the 6,000 varieties of securities which were mentioned, but that they might also pursue those predatory and piratical schemers who even today are working from under this securities law and are swindling many people who would like to be investors in good securities.

The committee saw fit to reduce the Budget estimate by approximately $640,000. The officers of this Commission stated, as I understand from the report, that if they got the $2,340,000 they could then provide for only approximately 56 percent of the forces the Commission felt were needed to organize their bureau and do the field work it was indicated they should do.

This is a new activity under the new deal. For a number of years, particularly in the last 5 years, there has been a growing demand for national legislation providing some sort of a commission to control and stop the financial piracy which has been going on. So it seems to me that this Congress ought to approve the plans of this Commission for its own work. If the sum appropriated should prove to be larger than they need, I have confidence in the character of the men whom the President appointed to run this Commission to feel that they will not use more of the funds than absolutely necessary to carry on their activities.

Neither do I believe that this Congress should cut down on appropriations as has been done in previous Congresses for the Trade Commission and as was done with the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice in previous years and actually circumscribe their opportunity to render the people the right kind of service. For this reason I have offered the substitute amendment, hoping that it may be adopted, that this Commission may be assured of the amount allowed them by the Bureau of the Budget and assuring them further that this Congress is heartily back of the great work which they are undertaking.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The committee, of which I happen to be temporary chairman, brought into being originally the Federal Trade Commission. It also handled the legislation known as the "Securities Act of 1933 and the Stock Exchange Act of 1934." Originally the administration of the Securities Act was placed in the Federal Trade Commission. When we passed the stock-exchange regulation bill, setting up a new commission, the activities in reference to securities in the Federal Trade Commission were transferred to the new Commission.

I quite agree with the gentleman that this Commission has about as important work to do as any commission in the Government. I think I stated to the chairman of the subcommittee that I thought they had kept the estimate far too low. It will be remembered that from 1922 to 1932 in this country there were issued by various corporations and offered to the public $50,000,000,000 in securities of all kinds. The Department of Commerce, in an investigation which they made, solemnly found that $25,000,000,000 of them were not worth the paper they were written on, and yet they had been issued by these corporations, offered to the public, and in many instances sold to innocent investors. This Commission has all that to look after. It has the tangled matters in the stock exchanges throughout the country to look after, and I may say I think it is, taking man for man, one of the ablest commissions in the Government, and it is doing a great work. Personally, I think that the Commission should have the $2,300,000 in the Budget estimate; but realizing the force of the committee and its investigation of the matter, I determined this morning I would introduce an amendment raising it to $2,000,000, believing that in all probability we would not be able to raise the amount recommended by this committee by $600,000. Therefore I am very glad that the committee has offered the amendment to raise this appropriation to $2,000,000. Another body will have a chance to consider this matter; and being thankful for the generosity of the chairman of the subcommittee and his committee, as well as the full committee, as far as I am individually concerned, I am going to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia and oppose the amendment offered to raise the amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the testimony of the Chairman of this Commission this morning before our committee was to the effect that the peak load for which they expected an appropriation to carry on their activities would amount to $4,000,000, and this Commission set up that peak load and endeavored to reach the peak of appropriation in less than a year after this bill was passed without that character of experience essential for an economical administration.

The committee felt they ought to approach this matter of increasing this appropriation gradually in order that they may have some experience in the matter and profit by that experience in reducing administration expenses. It has been operating for a short while. The Chairman of the Commission told us this morning that there was plain evidence that some abuses that were heretofore in common practice had diminished or ceased because the people involved were afraid of the Federal Government's supervising these exchanges and security issues.

Now, why increase it to 1,100 or 1,200 employees as they desire right off the bat? They have 376 now. This $2,000,000 will give them an increased personnel.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true if they get $2,340,000 the total number of employees would not exceed 643?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is right.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that unless they get that amount they are not going to be able to put investigators out into the field to investigate the practices of these fly-by-night bond salesmen who travel here and there, spending as high as $15,000 a month in working up manipulations of securities? Is it not true if we restrict this to even $2,000,000 we are going to limit the activities of the Commission so far as field investigations are concerned.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman from Texas yield so that I may answer the question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the evidence shows the full appropriation allotted by the Bureau of the Budget would give them a total personnel of 653. That is correct. However, their original request was for a personnel the first year of 1,100 employees. The $2,000,000 will give them enough money to set up certain regional offices in the field. Now, they cannot set up these offices over night, and in the deliberate judgment of this committee this appropriation will give them ample funds to make all of the orderly, conservative expansion that they would be able to make in their first year's operation. They will not be restricted or retarded in any reasonable, orderly work that they would be able to do in their first year's operation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague is correct. May I make a further statement. The testimony of the Chairman of this Commission indicated that there is a probability the next Congress may be able to amend this securities bill, so that it may be just as efficiently administered, and the same results accomplished with a less amount of appropriation. Let us give them the $2,000,000. Let us allow them to get experience. It may not be necessary to increase the $2,000,000 in the next Congress. We want results. We want efficient results, and we want those results with the least possible appropriation. I believe the Commission as it is now composed will secure those results. This Commission is composed of good men, able, intelligent, efficient, and deeply interested in stopping the abuses, the frauds, and deceptions heretofore practiced upon a gullible and confiding public.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and rise in support of the substitute amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, increasing the appropriation in this item to the figure asked for by the Budget Director.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I believe has as much information with reference to this subject as any other Member of the House. I know that he is as familiar—and perhaps more familiar—with this general subject matter as any member of the Committee on Appropriations or any other Member of this House, because he has been very closely identified with this entire proposition, has watched the progress of this legislation, and should have information upon which to base a sound and matured judgment. I was very pleased to hear him state on the floor a few moments ago that in his opinion the figure put in the amendment by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] is the proper figure and that his own judgment dictated that this figure should be put in the bill.

I am willing to follow his judgment rather than his action. He stated that because of fear that the Appropriations Committee had such powerful influence that they would be able to stop the deliberate judgment of the Membership of the House, and because of the fact that he feared he would be unable to prevail over the Committee on Appropriations he reconciled himself to taking $2,000,000 rather than $2,340,000. As I said a moment ago, I am more willing to follow his matured judgment, for which I have the highest regard, than I am to follow his action in going along with the Appropriations Committee.

I believe the Membership of this House should give a great deal of consideration to the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and should follow the Director of the Budget, especially in view of the fact that this figure of $2,340,000 is nearly $2,000,000 less than the men who will be charged with this responsibility have asked for in connection with this work.

I sincerely hope the Membership of the House will support the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. All we can find out, Mr. Chairman, is what we read in the papers, but is it not true there have been intimations that the Securities Act as now being administered does not have sufficient teeth and that the responsibilities and duties of the Commission are going to be enlarged rather than restricted?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am firmly convinced the gentleman is right, and for that reason I am supporting the amendment offered by my colleague.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, this Congress in the last session appropriated billions of dollars to support a recovery program, and we will be called on shortly to appropriate more billions for a recovery program.

In the last session of Congress we passed the Securities Act which set up the Commission that is now under consideration. During the years of the depression thousands and hundreds of thousands of companies and business organizations have gone into bankruptcy and passed out of existence, and now business must be refinanced and securities must be issued and sold.

This Commission will have control and supervision over the issuance and sale of these securities; and to say that business must wait for some slow process of creating an organization of this kind and that business must languish and that no new companies must be organized seems to me to be entirely wrong.

We know from the records of the Federal Trade Commission that hundreds of worthy business organizations are languishing and waiting for the supervision and approval which the Federal Trade Commission should give and give promptly, and we should help this Commission by making the appropriation adequate to finance the organization to permit business to function so that we may restore confidence and provide for the creation of business organizations to handle the business of the country.

I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman to increase the appropriation and provide an adequate amount.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question, if I may. I had intended to take the floor.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in support of the amendment for the balance of the 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota was on his feet and had secured recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] asks unanimous consent to ask a question of the gentleman from Virginia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would the gentleman from Virginia mind stating to the committee upon what information this item was fixed at $2,000,000? The gentleman's committee held hearings and heard representatives of the Commission, undoubtedly.

Mr. WOODRUM. We had hearings before the subcommittee at the time the appropriation was cut to $1,600,000, and subsequent hearings were held this morning before the Deficiency Appropriations Committee, and, based upon those hearings, after conference with the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], I have offered this amendment.

Will the Chair now state the parliamentary situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offered an amendment, at line 10, page 24, increasing the appropriation from $1,649,244 to $2,000,000. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] offered a substitute increasing the amount of $1,649,244 to $2,340,000. The question is now upon the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were 15 ayes and 102 noes.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Securities and Exchange Commission, $1,679,244.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to correct the total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18, page 24, strike out the sum of "$1,679,244" and insert "$2,030,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

American ethnology: For continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii, the excavation and preservation of archeologic remains under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including necessary employees, the preparation of manuscript, drawings, and illustrations, the purchase of books and periodicals, and traveling expenses, $58,730.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as a pro forma amendment, I move to amend, on page 25, line 9, by striking out the words "preservation of archeologic remains." Mr. Chairman, for the preservation of the archeologic remains of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board we appropriated $264,000 a while ago. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is one of the able, adept, discerning statesmen of the House. He made a very apropos suggestion a while ago that it was not necessary to pass my amendment to strike out the $264,000 salary item that pays the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, because my purpose in offering the amendment had already been accomplished.

He was exactly right, Mr. Chairman. Because when the Chair first put the question practically the entire Membership present here voted for my amendment to strike this $264,000 salary item out, and the Chair announced such vote by stating "that the amendment was agreed to."

That action accomplished my purpose, because it will show this arrogant Board that it cannot treat Members of Congress with contempt and get away with it. It will realize that the creature is not greater than its creator.

Our distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was exactly right in appealing to the House to change its vote and to provide salaries and expenses for a Federal Home Loan Bank Board. And I expected all the time that in the end we would make such provision. But raising this question at this time in the way I raised it was the only possible way under our parliamentary procedure to immediately bring to the attention of said Board that Members of Congress are thoroughly dissatisfied with it.

Money is already appropriated to pay the salaries of the members of this Board until the 1st day of July next. If we had passed my amendment and had stricken said $264,000 from this bill, that would not have stopped their salaries between now and next July. It requires the passage of legislation to stop their salaries. It requires quite a length of time and a long-drawn-out procedure to impeach them. For the above reasons I resorted to the only means available for bringing to the immediate attention of this Board the fact that on this floor and in the cloak rooms and in the House Office Buildings there is a feeling of resentment, a feeling of dissatisfaction, and a feeling of distrust in the minds and hearts of Members against this Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation because of their miserable mess of mismanagement.

And these Board officials may just as well understand it now as later that Members of Congress are getting tired of it and are not going to stand for it.

As a representative of the people, our colleague from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] has the right to see any file in any department, bureau, independent office, or commission of this Government. Yet when he requested the autocratic officials of this H. O. L. C. to allow him to see Government records in their office, they arrogantly told him that he could not see them. But he did see them, though they delayed him about an hour before he could convince them that he had the right to see them.

Our colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] went down there and asked to see Mr. Paul A. Warner, the chief examiner, and when the front office flunky went inside Warner's private office to tell him, Jed heard Warner tell the go-between that he "did not have any time to waste seeing any Congressman." But Warner must have heard of this "rumbling" going on here in the House, for this afternoon he sent our friend from Oklahoma [JED JOHNSON] a letter of apology for according him such discourteous treatment.

My friend and colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], whom I consider one of the most valuable Members of this House, said that he was willing to admit that this Board had treated me badly about an appraiser, but, as a matter of fact, it was this appraiser who suffered from their bad treatment. Until the 3d of this month I represented 19 counties in Texas. I selected all 19 of the appraisers for my said 19 counties, and all of them were appointed by the H. O. L. C., and all 19 of them have been functioning. Only against one of them was there any complaint. All of the other 18 were entirely satisfactory.

I selected all 19 of the attorneys for my 19 counties, and they were all appointed by the H. O. L. C., and all of them have been functioning, and are still functioning, and not a complaint has been made against any of the 19, but all 19 attorneys selected by me are entirely satisfactory to the H. O. L. C. Each and all of said 19 attorneys are capable, able, experienced attorneys of high standing and integrity. Each and all of the 19 appraisers selected by me, and accepted and qualified by the H. O. L. C., are high-class, capable, experienced business men of good standing. I hand-picked all of the attorneys. I hand-picked all of the appraisers.

But since last May this H. O. L. C. has boycotted one appraiser, Hon. Fred Cockrell, of Abilene. As I said yesterday, his father served with great honor and distinction in this House here many years ago. His uncle, Senator Francis Cockrell, was a distinguished United States Senator from Missouri. Judge Fred Cockrell knows the history of every piece of property in his county. He knows the history of every citizen in Abilene whose property he appraises. He has lived there 40 years. He has the confidence, respect, and friendship of everyone. He has had wide business experience. There is on file with this Board here an endorsement of him signed by our newspapermen, our bankers, our chamber of commerce officials, our mayor, some of our city officials, some of our county officials, and many leading business men of his home city, certifying to his integrity, his experience, his business qualifications, and his worthiness in every respect, and urging that he not be boycotted any further.

James Shaw, the manager at Dallas, Tex., has been to Abilene several times during the year and a half that Fred Cockrell has been county appraiser. Shaw's assistant and his general attorney have been in Abilene. Yet not one time have they ever called on Fred Cockrell, and they have never seen him. Not one word have they ever sent him indicating that he would be discharged. And he has never been discharged. To this good day no notice that he has been discharged has ever been sent to him. Yet last June, acting on orders, he claims, came from Washington James Shaw, employed another appraiser in the place of Judge Cockrell, and in October Shaw admitted that from June up to that time he had sent 155 appraisals to this new appraiser, and had sent none to Judge Cockrell, when Judge Cockrell was entitled to those 155 appraisals, and was entitled to his fees of $5 each for said 155 appraisals, showing that this H. O. L. C. has thus defrauded Judge Cockrell out of $775 to which he is entitled. He has not been discharged. The H. O. L. C. writes that he is not discharged. They just employed another in his place. But they did not tell him anything about it. They did not notify him. They just have not sent him any appraisals. They have simply boycotted him. And their only excuse is they claim he is "too old." Yet another appraiser in one of my counties, who is entirely satisfactory to them, is 5 years older than Judge Cockrell.

One of their own Board members here, William F. Stevenson, is 71 years old. They do not think that he is too old to be a Board member of the H. O. L. C. here in Washington, and they have not filed any old-age complaint against a very able and distinguished United States Senator who celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday the other day. But they boycott Judge Cockrell and refuse to send him 155 appraisals, claiming he is too old, when I know that Judge Cockrell is more active than any member of this Board, and I believe that he can do more work in a day than this entire Board can do in a week, and I believe that he has more practical, good, common sense, better business experience, and better business judgment than all of the Board members put together.

If they had any good reason to discharge Judge Cockrell, they owed it to him in all common decency to notify him of it. He had the right to know what they had against him. He had the right to be heard. He should have been given a hearing. As I was allowed to select him, and did select him, and he did act for them as appraiser, and appraised many pieces of property up to June 1934, this H. O. L. C. should have notified me last June that he was not satisfactory, and that they were going to replace him. But they did not notify me. They did not notify him. Without letting Judge Cockrell or myself know anything about it, they employed another last June, and then boycotted Judge Cockrell by sending 155 appraisals to the one whom they employed in his place that they should have sent to him.

And the worst of it all is that during all of this time, from June to October, they led me to believe that Judge Cockrell was still their appraiser and was still getting their appraisals from Taylor County, and I learned of their boycotting him only through accident, as Judge Cockrell was too loyal a friend of mine to worry me with any complaint about it.

Last June, before we adjourned, I learned from a friend in the Dallas office that James Shaw was going to try to displace Judge Cockrell with another appraiser, and I discussed the matter with Hon. William F. Stevenson, a member of the Board here, and I was assured that if Shaw did try it that I would be notified of it before any action was taken, and was assured that Judge Fred Cockrell would be given a fair, square deal.

Notwithstanding that, in June, without notice to him of it, another appraiser had been employed in his place, and from that date on they had boycotted Judge Cockrell. They had the audacity to send him a notice last August, signed by Philip W. Kniskern, chief appraiser here in Washington, for Judge Cockrell to go to Dallas, 200 miles from his home, at his own expense to be examined by Philip W. Kniskern as to his qualifications. It would have been just as apropos for Kniskern to have notified James A. Farley to appear before him on qualifications. On September 13, 1934, I wrote to Hon. William F. Stevenson, a member of the Board, asking if it could not be arranged for Judge Cockrell to be examined in Abilene, where many civil-service examinations occur and where there are ample facilities for holding same—the United States Civil Service having held a competitive examination for me there last Saturday for entrance to both the Military Academy at West Point and the Naval Academy at Annapolis—which letter of mine Mr. Stevenson answered on September 21, 1934, in which he said:

I asked Mr. Kniskern to arrange if possible to have the examination of Mr. Cockrell at his home town of Abilene, where you state that they have the facilities for doing it, and while he did not say he would, he said he would be glad to reach any arrangement that would be satisfactory, and the only chance for him is to stand the examination. He has to qualify as an appraiser under the rules now in existence, one of which has been laid down by Mr. Kniskern.

Not one word was said about this Board having notified James Shaw last June to employ another appraiser in Judge Cockrell's place. Not one word was said about another appraiser having been employed last June. Not one word was said about them sending 155 appraisals to the new appraiser, and not sending them to Judge Cockrell. I found out all of that later from others. I was led to believe that Judge Cockrell was still the appraiser, and was in good standing, but that he would have to take an examination prescribed by this Mr. Philip W. Kniskern, and let Kniskern qualify him before he could remain in good standing as an appraiser. He would have to have the Philip W. Kniskern stamp on him.

And from colleagues I get some very interesting information about Mr. Philip W. Kniskern. I learn that every appraiser in the United States was required to take this Philip W. Kniskern examination. Judge Cockrell had already qualified and had been investigated, and had been acting for this Board as its Taylor County appraiser ever since the Corporation was created in 1933, and up to June 1934 he had appraised 534 homesteads in Abilene on applications for loans, for which this Corporation had up to June 1934, covering his work for about a year, paid him the sum of $2,670, yet all of a sudden their Mr. Philip W. Kniskern required him to take a Kniskern examination in August 1934, to see whether he was still qualified, so that he could have the Kniskern brand put on him.

There are 254 county appraisers for Texas alone. For the 48 States there must be an enormous number. All were required to take this Kniskern examination in August 1934. About a year ago this Philip W. Kniskern published a book entitled "Appraisals of Real Estate and Evaluations." One of my colleagues tells me that just before the appraisers took this Kniskern examination they received from Washington, on plain stationery and an unprinted envelope, a communication suggesting that if they would read a book by Philip W. Kniskern entitled "Appraisals of Real Estate and Evaluations", it would help them materially in passing such examination. Naturally many of them bought the book. It must have been a bonanza for Philip W. Kniskern. But some could not buy the book. And I am told that many of them failed to pass the Philip W. Kniskern examination.

This was a very unique way this H. O. L. C. Board had of getting rid of appraisers appointed by Congressmen. It is but natural, when you find Paul A. Warner exclaiming from his private office that he has no time to waste on seeing Congressman JED JOHNSON. It is but natural when our colleague from Cleveland, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY], is told by this Board that he, a representative of the people, can not see their records. It is but natural when after I had selected all 19 appraisers in my 19 counties, and they had been employed, and I had selected all 19 attorneys in my 19 counties, and they had been employed by this Board, for its chairman, after his head swelled with a few months of autocratic domination of a little bureau, to write me as Chairman John H. Fahey wrote me on October 12, 1934:

Let me say first that our Board never extended to Democratic Congressmen the "right to name county appraisers and attorneys in the counties in their districts." No authority was ever given by the Board to anyone to make such a commitment.

Naturally our colleague from Georgia [Mr. Cox], when I read the above quotation from Chairman John H. Fahey the other day, exclaimed that Mr. Fahey was not telling the truth. Judge Cox knew it was not the truth, because he had appointed his appraisers and his attorneys. I knew it was not the truth, because I had appointed my 19 appraisers and my 19 attorneys.

I now represent only 12 counties. In Llano, one of my former counties, which is now represented by my colleague [Mr. SOUTH], Mr. C. H. Brame has been the county appraiser for the H. O. L. C. ever since it was organized. He applied for a loan over a year ago to save his home from foreclosure. The mortgagee agreed on April 10, 1934, to accept bonds. Yet it was never closed, and I have received a letter from Mr. C. H. Brame—this H. O. L. C.'s own appraiser—dated January 3, 1935, in which he says:

I am writing to you as a friend for advice. My mortgagee has taken snap judgment on me and has closed me out at foreclosure sale. My claim has been pending with the H. O. L. C. for a year. On April 10, 1934, my mortgagee agreed to take bonds and signed bond acceptance, and I thought everything was all right, when I received notice that their funds were exhausted and the H. O. L. C. had suspended all applications. And my mortgagee foreclosed and I have lost my home.

I made complaint to John H. Fahey, at Washington, telling him about the slow methods and low appraisals here, and that they had actually closed up only 10 loans in this county. I pray you in the name of mercy and humanity to please do something to help me save my home.

Naturally Chairman John H. Fahey in his comfortable suite of offices in a magnificent mansion in Washington has not any time to pay any attention to such an appeal as the above, when his little examiner, Paul A. Warner, has not any time to waste on seeing Congressman JOHNSON of Oklahoma, and cannot be bothered with showing records to Congressman SWEENEY, of Cleveland, Ohio. So their own county appraiser, C. H. Brame, a highly respected citizen and Democrat of Llano, Tex., loses his home, and his family is turned out into the cold in January winter when his mortgagee agreed on April 10, 1934, to accept bonds.

I now represent Fisher County. Prior to January 3, 1935, it was represented by my colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES]. Exercising his prerogative, which Chairman Fahey says he never possessed, but which in fact he did have and exercised, Marvin appointed one of his splendid constituents, Mr. E. H. Shelton, of Roby, Tex., as county appraiser for the H. O. L. C. in Fisher County. This appraiser, Mr. Shelton, made an application for a loan to save his home. It was pigeonholed for nearly a year. There was delay after delay. Finally his mortgagee foreclosed, sold him out, and took his home away.

I am getting tired of having this arrogant Board accord such mistreatment to my constituents. They are going to have some rocky roads to travel from now on, until they begin to see the light of day, and begin to do justice to Americans. They are going to do justice to Fred Cockrell. They cannot boycott him and get away with it. They cannot mistreat him. They cannot rob him. They cannot defraud him.

Let them take a warning from this almost unanimous vote today to take away their salaries. Next time they force us to have such a vote it will be a dead earnest vote and it will stick, and we will take away their salaries. And if they know what is good for them they had better annul and call off this book-selling Philip W. Kniskern examination to qualify appraisers in the Kniskern way, who qualified a year ago and have been qualified ever since, and do not need Kniskern qualifying.

Of course, in this bill my amendment to strike out their salary should have been defeated, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] did exactly right in asking you to defeat it.

Of course, I expected, as every legislator would expect, to put the money back into the bill. A proper board must have money. This Board must have money. But if that Board has common sense it is going to change its plans and methods of operation. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TARIFF COMMISSION

For salaries and expenses of the Tariff Commission, including purchase and exchange of labor-saving devices, the purchase of professional and scientific books, laws books, books of reference, gloves and other protective equipment for photostat and other machine operators, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and contract stenographic reporting services, as authorized by sections 330 to 341 of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 19, secs. 1330–1341), $955,000, of which amount not to exceed $870,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia; not to exceed $2,500 for expenses, except membership fees, of attendance at meetings concerned with subjects under investigation by the Commission; and not to exceed $7,500 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 5, sec. 118a), but not to exceed $1,700 for any one person: Provided, That the Commission may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any member of the Tariff Commission who shall hereafter participate in any proceedings under sections 336, 337, and 338 of the Tariff Act of 1930, wherein he or any member of his family has any special, direct, and pecuniary interest, or in which he has acted as attorney or special representative.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BREWSTER: On page 27, line 17, after the figures "1342", at the end of the line, in line 17, strike out the following words: "$955,000, of which amount not to exceed $870,000 may", and insert in lieu thereof, "$528,000, of which amount not to exceed $443,247 may."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment provides for the reduction of the appropriation for the Tariff Commission by the amount which the committee has reported is required for use in the trade-agreement work this coming year and presents the first opportunity for this House to consider the consequences of the legislation enacted last spring regarding reciprocal trade treaties. A distinguished Democrat, I believe, said that the tariff was a local issue. I speak, perhaps, primarily in a very personal and local sense, as I am primarily concerned with the Cuban trade treaty which has been enacted during this past year, and I use the word "enacted" advisedly, with more than 1,000 items, one of which very vitally concerns not alone my district but many other districts throughout the United States. I represent primarily potatoes, of which we raise some 50,000,000 bushels, which are now selling at a price in my district of 4 cents a peck, which represents a loss to the people raising them of more than $12,000,000 on the actual out-of-pocket costs. If the same conditions prevail in some of the other 18 States which are directly concerned with the commercial production of potatoes, it represents a loss on the total potato crop this year of nearly $100,000,000. I do not say that the reduction of 50 percent in the tariff upon potatoes in the Cuban trade treaty is entirely responsible for this condition, but I do say that it has an aspect of kicking a man when he is down, and I say, representing the people of my district concerned with this, that we feel very strongly that the operations of this act have not been calculated to serve the prosperity of those concerned with the production of potatoes. I do not know what may be the effect of some of the other thousand items comprised within this bill, nor do I refer in the limited time I may have to the broader questions of policy this House must shortly consider as a result of the authoritative decision given to us within the past 5 days by the Supreme Court of the United States, wherein they say to us this:

Among the numerous and diverse objectives broadly stated, the President was not required to choose. The President was not required to ascertain and proclaim the conditions prevailing in the industry which made the prohibition necessary. The Congress left the matter to the President without standard or rule, to be dealt with as he pleased. The effort by ingenious and diligent construction to supply a criterion still permits such a breadth of authorized action as essentially to commit to the President the functions of a legislature rather than those of an executive or administrative officer executing a declared legislative policy. We find nothing in section 1 which limits or controls the authority conferred by section 9 (c).

I hold in my hand the Tariff Trade Treaty Act of last spring, and the language of that act, read in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court in the oil case, certainly must be calculated to give every responsible and thoughtful Member of this body very serious pause. Accordingly, for the purpose at least of recording my own earnest objections to a continuation of this policy by the provision of these funds, I submit this amendment here today, and I ask that every Member representing not alone potatoes but representing all the thousands of other items vitally affected by this trade treaty consider seriously whether he desires to keep suspended over the head of American agriculture and industry this sword of Damocles in the constant threat of tariff revision and the resultant destruction of confidence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine has a very interesting argument, and I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for 5 minutes more.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am fully aware, and I address this particularly to the Members from the Southern States, that my district is not the one primarily affected by the operation of this treaty, since we do have open to us for a certain period the seed-potato market in Cuba, but those producing potatoes in Florida, in Texas, and in every other Southern State are immediately and vitally affected, and I assume that the same condition prevails, particularly as to items such as tomatoes, cucumbers, eggplant, and squash.

Mr. SHORT. Also sugar.

Mr. BREWSTER. I leave it to my friends from Michigan and other States to mention sugar, which is certainly a matter of very cital concern, and of which I did not speak because others, and particularly some gentlemen on the other side of the House, are much better qualified than I.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine, because I am keenly interested, what connection this discourse might have with the possible abridgment of the amount asked in the appropriation.

Is it the purpose to singe the wings of the Tariff Commission, or does the gentleman have a definite purpose in mind of alleviating this condition of which he speaks, because I want to be helpful on the question of potatoes, because in Michigan we produce potatoes also?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am one who shares with the gentlemen on the other side most profound respect and support for the activities of a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference, which was the pledge of the Democratic platform of 2 years ago. [Applause.]

I am entirely in accord with that and I have the highest respect for the chairman. The committee, however, on page 13, has reported that the Commission's work this year is primarily that as adviser to the President and other departments of the Government in the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements. Of the total estimate of $955,000, it is estimated that $426,000 will be needed for the trade agreement work. The Secretary of State sent a man to the New England Council to tell us about the work. I asked him afterward why they cut the tariff on potatoes 50 percent, and he did not even know the 50-percent cut was in the treaty. I asked him why they did it, and he said that someone over in the Agriculture Department told him it would be all right. This illustrates to me the perils of continuing the negotiation of these treaties with a cut of tariffs upon items that vitally concern so many sections without a responsible legislative rule of policy. If you wish to adopt free trade, it is within the power of this Congress. Or you may wish to adopt competitive tariffs, whatever they may be, as pledged in the last national Democratic platform. We on this side believe in protective tariffs. But whatever policy we adopt, the Supreme Court of the United States has said that this body here must lay down the rule and not abdicate its legislative functions. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to use a few moments in support of this amendment. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has moved to amend this bill in such a way that the funds would not exist for carrying on those schemes for cutting down the tariff on things which we raise in America and letting things come in from the outside which are going to further depress conditions in this country. That is the object of this amendment. It is to stop the operations of those in the Tariff Commission whose work is directed toward the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements.

Every single one of the items which were covered in the reciprocal trade agreement with Cuba hit something that is produced in this country. It hits the sugar producers very seriously. It will hit the potato producers in the southern part of the country next winter. It will hit different things all over the country. Why should we go on with an operation which has been proved to be of damage to the people of this country? Why should we not stop it by cutting out this item in the appropriation bill for the Tariff Commission, which would permit them to continue the operation of cutting down our tariff for the benefit of foreign producers?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman, I think, knows that Massachusetts has been adversely affected in the matter of tomatoes. We raise a great many tomatoes under glass and have exported many. The gentleman also knows that Massachusetts and other cotton-textile States and cotton-growing States are protesting against this Cuban treaty.

Mr. TABER. I think that is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is carried, it will cripple a fact-finding commission and deny assistance to our officials who need it, will it not?

Mr. TABER. It will only stop that portion of a fact-finding commission that relates to the reciprocal tariff proposition, which is such a great damage to the workingman and farmer of this country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that a reduction in this appropriation is not going to stop the negotiations for reciprocal treaties which are now pending. Therefore is it not wise for our representatives to get all information available rather than making them work in the dark?

Mr. TABER. It will let the people of this country and the Executive know that the Congress places its stamp of disapproval upon wiping out tariffs which are meant to protect the people of this country against foreign competition.

Mr. COCHRAN. The only way that Congress can place its stamp of disapproval is by repealing the law, and not by crippling the Tariff Commission, the fact-finding agency.

Mr. TABER. They can stop the means by which the operation is carried on. That is what this amendment does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. DIRKSEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the genetleman from Virginia, chairman of the committee.

Mr. WOODRUM. How much time is remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven and one-half minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. I desire the last 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserved time before the motion of the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM. But the gentleman let somebody else take his time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was not recognized by the Chair, but I made a specific reservation of time before the time was closed on this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a member of a committee always has preference in recognition.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is so little that can be said in the brief time available that I will simply endorse the arguments and the logic of the former Governor of Maine, Mr. Brewster. We may not be able to repeal the provisions of the Reciprocal Trade Act, but we can, at least, make it ineffectual in its administration. That is all that this reduction in the appropriation seeks to do.

I wish to point out, however, to some of the Members of the House that, in addition to this reciprocal trade agreement with Cuba, alluded to by the gentleman from Maine, at least the facts tending toward negotiations have already been entertained, and the time for hearings has been closed in connection with proposed treaties with Switzerland, with Belgium, Colombia, Salvador, Spain, Brazil, and with a great many others. Insofar as the Belgium treaty is concerned, let me point out that there is a disposition to recommend that we give to Belgium 1 percent of the cement production of this country and that we reduce the tariff by 50 percent. This is just one country. Multiply this by 8 or 10 such examples—England, Spain, France, and all the other cement-producing countries, and we will give away approximately 700,000 barrels of the cement production of this country. What is the result. Oh, you are simply taking away that much from American labor, swapping an American customer for a foreign customer. If you want that foreign customer in place and preference of the American wage earner with his higher standard of living and working conditions and wages which are conducive to the welfare of the industry of this country, I, for my part, do not want to make the exchange.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Does the gentleman in advance of the negotiations know of similar treaties that we are going to enter into with England, France, and other countries?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Insofar as Switzerland is concerned, there are negotiations covering watches, clocks, and mechanical contrivances. In the matter of the Netherland Empire, on which hearings will be held shortly, there is involved tapioca starch, of which 190,000,000 pounds were imported into this country in 1933. Fancy imports of such competitive products as tapioca starch, which are in direct competition with corn and the derivatives of corn, at a time when the farmers of Illinois and the corn-producing States are being constrained to reduce the acreage and the production of corn. Now, under the act providing for reciprocal trade agreements, passed by the Seventy-third Congress, these treaties may run for a period of 3 years; and I venture the opinion that once such a treaty is declared operative it will be 3 years or longer before we can do anything to overthrow it and recapture American markets for our own farmers and laboring men.

It seems strange, indeed, that our trade experts cannot see that when you permit foreign manufactured goods to enter this country in return for the fancied benefits derived from preferences for a few of our products we do nothing more than import foreign labor. Be it lead pencils, pottery, or electric lamps from Japan, linen and shoes from Czechoslovakia, cement from Belgium, wines from Spain, or any other products, it means nothing more than our domestic production of those items is curtailed in direct proportion to the amount of such products permitted to come in. By curtailing production you curtail labor. Curtail labor and you decrease purchasing power. Decrease purchasing power and you make the depression a fixed and static kind of thing. Meanwhile the only benefit derived is a very restricted outlet for some of our own products to countries whose standard of living and whose purchasing power is infinitely lower than our own. You swap a good customer for a poor one. Certainly nobody will contend that in Europe or the Orient their people are the equal of our own people as potential customers of our farmers, and yet in essence we give the farmer an oriental consumer and give foreign countries an American consumer whenever we curtail production by excessive imports and thus deprive the American workman of a job.

Years ago there may have been some virtue in this free-trade argument. It might have had substance in the days of Adam Smith. Today, however, we find that the mass-production principles exemplified by Henry Ford and other American industries have been adopted by Japan, France, Russia, and all other countries. Moreover, they have no N. R. A., no minimum-wage and maximum-hour regulations. They have depreciated their currencies so that cost of production is low. Since we operate in a world-price market, it means that the low man walks off with the bacon. How can we maintain our standards of living and preserve our market for our own farmers against that form of competition? I am averse to trading with foreign nations when the advantages of low-cost production, depreciated money, long hours, and low living standards are so decidedly on their side. The only result can be an invasion of our markets that will leave us with a horrible headache. To adopt this amendment will not repeal the Reciprocal Trade Act. It will simply stifle those functions of the Tariff Commission dealing with such reciprocal agreements. However, to adopt this amendment does not impair a single function that the Tariff Commission exercised before the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Act by the last Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, this is another amendment which seeks to administer a psychological spanking. After the committee very wisely voted down the amendment of the gentleman from Texas he very frankly said that his amendment was a fool amendment. I do not know whether the distinguished former Governor of Maine would want to make the same admission or not.

Mr. BREWSTER. I would not.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now, Mr. Chairman, my good friend from Illinois was down in the Well of the House a while ago explaining to the Committee how utterly futile it was to undertake to repeal existing law by merely withholding appropriations. I could insert in the RECORD right here his speech made in that regard, and I know of no better argument to defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, for it is just as utterly futile.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, let us bear in mind the fact that the Trade Agreement Act did not confer upon the Tariff Commission the right to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements; they have no power whatever over the matter. That act conferred upon the President of the United States the right to negotiate these treaties, and he is proceeding to exert that right. To withhold this appropriation from the Federal Tariff Commission would not in any wise affect or retard or impair the right, the power, and the duty of the President to negotiate these trade agreements. All it possibly could do would be to deprive him of the expert advice of that impartial fact-finding commission, the Federal Tariff Commission. So to cut the funds of the Tariff Commission in this way would have the effect only of taking away from the President the right to call upon the Tariff Commission for opinions and fact-finding operations.

Again may I remind this body that there is a way always that this Congress can make its will felt. If the gentleman does not like the Tariff Commission Act, he can repeal it if he can get the votes to do it.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. What right under the Constitution has this body to delegate its legislative functions to the Chief Executive?

Mr. WOODRUM. As the gentleman knows, that is the thing we thrashed over when we passed the Trade Agreement Act; and there is a tribunal that can, and doubtless will, pass upon that.

Mr. HOOK. It has already passed upon the delegation of authority in the case of oil.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is a forum in which these questions can be settled definitely and emphatically and by whose decisions the American citizens will abide; but what an utterly futile thing it would be to withhold this appropriation. Again I say to my good friend from Michigan that the purpose of my distinguished colleague from Maine has been accomplished. He has administered a psychological spanking; he has registered his protest against this act for the benefit of his potato growers in Maine; and I ask the committee to proceed to vote down this amendment.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Do I understand that the gentleman proposes that this body shall enact legislation without regard to the Constitution of the United States, because forsooth, the question of its constitutionality can be determined ultimately by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think I said anything of the kind or anything upon which the gentleman could make such an assumption.

Mr. BREWSTER. I understood the gentleman to say these matters could be determined by the Supreme Court.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 54, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: For all salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration, including the expenses of maintenance and operation of medical, hospital, and domiciliary services of the Veterans' Administration, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting war veterans", approved July 3, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 11–11f), and any and all laws for which the Veterans' Administration is now or may hereafter be charged with administering, $86,700,000: Provided, That not to exceed $3,500 of this amount shall be available for expenses, except membership fees, of employees detailed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to attend meetings of associations for the promotion of medical science and annual national conventions of organized war veterans: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available also for personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof; for expenses incurred in packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other property, not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds, of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty and when specifically authorized by the Administrator; furnishing and laundering of such wearing apparel as may be prescribed for employees in the performance of their official duties; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; for passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of same, including not more than two passenger automobiles for general administrative use of the central office in the District of Columbia; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to utilize Government-owned automotive equipment in transporting children of Veterans' Administration employees located at isolated stations to and from school under such limitations as he may by regulation prescribe; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to expend during the fiscal year 1936 not to exceed $2,000 for actuarial services pertaining to the Government life-insurance fund, to be obtained by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as he may determine to be reasonable; for allotment and transfer to the Public Health Service, the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, for disbursement by them under the various headings of their applicable appropriations, of such amounts as are necessary for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration, including minor repairs and improvements of existing facilities under their jurisdiction necessary to such care and treatment; for expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of farms; for recreational articles and facilities at institutions maintained by the Veterans' Administration; for administrative expenses incidental to securing employment for war veterans; for funeral, burial, and other expenses incidental thereto for beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration accruing during the fiscal year 1936 or prior fiscal years: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for the care and maintenance of veterans in hospitals or homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available for the purchase of tobacco to be furnished, subject to such regulations as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall prescribe, to veterans receiving hospital treatment or domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration hospitals or homes: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for medical and hospital services under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available, not to exceed $10,000, for experimental purposes to determine the value of certain types of treatment: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888 (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 134), as amended, for those veterans eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration facilities for domiciliary care.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCAS: On page 29, at the end of line 2, insert the following: "Provided, That when found to be to the best interest of the United States, not to exceed $500,000 of this amount may be used for payments to State institutions caring for and maintaining veterans suffering from neuropsychiatric ailments who are in such institutions on the date of the enactment of this act."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, the city of Jacksonville, Ill., is located in the Twentieth Congressional District of Illinois, which I have the honor to represent in the Seventy-fourth Congress, succeeding the Honorable Henry T. Rainey, the late and distinguished Speaker of the House. In the early history of our State those charged with the administration of government selected Jacksonville as the logical spot in which to build a State institution for those who were mentally ill. The World War not only accepted its toll in human life, but thousands upon thousands of veterans in the bloom of manhood returned shell-shocked, maimed, wounded, and mentally disturbed forever. Immediately following the war, and before the Government launched its huge program of hospital construction, the State of Illinois, heeding the request of a patriotic citizenry, caused to be constructed at Jacksonville and Elgin special, spacious, and standard cottages with all the up-to-date fixtures and equipment. This was done in order that the rehabilitation of a number of these disabled soldiers might become a reality and those whose minds were completely shattered might have the best that a grateful State could afford.

Today in Illinois the State hospitals at Jacksonville and Elgin are caring for 203 of these wards under a direct contract with the Government of the United States, and this arrangement between the State and the Government has been in existence from the day the Government started caring for veterans of the late war. It is interesting to note that many of the families of these boys live in or near the counties where these hospitals are located, and for all these years have yielded to these dependents their parental care, devotion, and love, as only those who have experienced family tragedies of such character can thoroughly appreciate and understand.

Under the present bill there is nothing which can keep the Director of the Veterans' Administration from transferring every one of these insane veterans from Jacksonville and Elgin to some Federal institution beyond the confines of the State of Illinois, if and when hospital beds are available. I am not unmindful of the Government's position of wanting complete charge of its wards, and in the main I agree with this basic and fundamental policy; but, my colleagues, this should be the humanitarian exception to the general rule. Illinois spent thousands upon thousands of dollars in constructing hospitals for these special cases. They were dedicated to these men who today are still suffering from the shellfire of the enemy. These institutions are peculiarly equipped to handle neuropsychiatric cases. The personnel is excellent. There are no better hospitals for this type of case in these United States. Many of these men have lived there for years with their loved ones nearby. The members of the American Legion posts of Jacksonville and Elgin have been most kind and interested in the welfare of these comrades. The service men throughout Illinois are asking that these men be permitted to remain in these institutions at Government expense. And yesterday I was advised by Watson Miller, chairman of the rehabilitation committee of the American Legion, that the cost price per capita with the State of Illinois for maintaining and supporting these men is comparable with the Government cost of men in Government hospitals.

The proposed amendment is nothing new. I seek no radical change or departure from the past. I only ask that we follow in the footsteps of those who were responsible for legislation of the same character in the last Congress. I respectfully call your attention to the language used by the Senate and the House of Representatives in making the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration on page 11, Public, No. 141, Seventy-third Congress. An examination of the appropriation given to the Veterans' Administration will disclose the same language used in connection with that appropriation as is now used in the purported amendment.

This important question was given consideration when the hearing was had before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, and on page 200 of the report of the hearings I find the following:

Mr. WOODRUM. On page 3 of your statement you refer to some language that was inserted in the bill, which you want to have eliminated. The wording was put in the last independent offices appropriation bill, was it not?

General HINES. It was put in in the Senate, at the request, I think, of the Senators from Illinois, to cover hospitalization; that is, to make sure that certain mental cases and neuropsychiatric cases hospitalized in Elgin and Jacksonville, in two State hospitals, would not be taken out and transferred to our own facilities.

Mr. WOODRUM. The elimination of this wording does not mean the withdrawal or elimination of any benefits to the veterans, does it?

General HINES. Not at all. We are following the policy, which I think is approved by the service organizations and by the public, that whenever the facilities in a Government institution are available and the guardian of a mental case consents, then that patient should be put in one of our institutions which is as near to his home as possible.

I have known General Hines for a great number of years. I appreciate the many responsibilities that are his throughout the United States as a result of his directorship of the Veterans' Administration. His answer to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia may be correct as to the general policy, but the general policy does not apply to the exception presented. General Hines is not thoroughly conversant with the true picture in the hospitals in question. Following his suggestion to a logical conclusion would mean that most of these men, if removed from the Elgin and Jacksonville hospitals, would be taken away from their homes and their families who reside in nearby counties, and I am certain that he and I both agree that such should not be done.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I shall presently insist on my point of order, but I desire very briefly to make a statement in response to the gentleman's remarks.

As I have explained personally to my colleague from Illinois, who has been so much interested and so industrious and so diligent in behalf of these veterans in his district, it is the policy of the Veterans' Administration, under the mandate of the law, to put veterans in Government institutions wherever Government facilities are available. This is for obvious reasons.

Last year when this bill was in the Senate, the Senators from Illinois, being apprehensive about the condition to which our colleague refers, inserted in the bill the language it is now proposed to put in. I have been in conference with General Hines, and so has my colleague who has just spoken. General Hines is thoroughly sympathetic with the situation mentioned by our colleague and has stated to me and authorized me to state to the House, in order to make it a matter of record, that he does not propose to interfere with the veterans in the hospitals at Elgin and Jacksonville, Ill., except in cases where the parent or guardian of such veterans would desire that they be removed to some Government institution.

Therefore, while the language is subject to a point of order because it amends basic law, I can give my colleague and the other Illinois Members who are interested, assurance that this situation will not be interfered with.

Mr. Chairman, I must now insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PARSONS). It is not within the province of the Chair to decide upon the merits or demerits of a proposed amendment. If this were not so, the Chair would perhaps rule otherwise; but under the rules of the House, this proposed amendment, constituting as it does a change of basic law upon an appropriation bill, the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pensions: For the payment of compensation, pensions, gratuities, and allowances, now authorized under any act of Congress, or regulation of the President based thereon, or which may hereafter be authorized, including emergency officers' retirement pay and annuities, the administration of which is now or may hereafter be placed in the Veterans' Administration, $400,760,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

My purpose in seeking recognition in this way is that, as I understand the rules, an amendment would not be in order, and therefore, in order that the record may be kept clear so far as my voting is concerned, I am exercising the privilege which has just been invoked.

I am unalterably opposed to the preferential treatment of officers above the heroic men they so heroically led. I am unalterably opposed to the emergency officers' retirement pay and annuities, and therefore, but for the rule, would offer an amendment to strike that part of this paragraph from the bill for which I am going to vote.

I have already introduced a bill to repeal the law relating to emergency officers' retirement pay and annuities.

For these reasons I shall vote for the bill, but desire to make this statement to my colleagues of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Adjusted-service certificate fund: For an amount necessary under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act (U. S. C., title 38, secs. 591–683; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 612–682), to provide for the payment of the face value of each adjusted-service certificate in 20 years from its date or on the prior death of the veteran, and to make loans to veterans and repayments to banks in accordance with section 507 of the act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 642, 647, 650; act July 21, 1933, 47 Stat., pp. 724–725), $100,000,000, to become available July 1, 1935, and remain available until expended.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REED of New York offers the following amendment: Page 34, line 13, after the figures "725", strike out "$100,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$140,000,000."

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the reason I am offering this amendment at this time is to protect the sinking fund which was provided under section 505 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act.

I call to the attention of the House that section, which is as follows:

There is hereby created a fund in the Treasury of the United States to be known as the "adjusted-service certificate fund", hereinafter in this title called "fund."

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each calendar year, beginning with the calendar year 1925 and ending with the calendar year 1946, an amount sufficient, as an annual premium, to provide for the payment of the face value of each adjusted-service certificate in 20 years from its date or on the prior death of the veteran, such amount to be determined in accordance with accepted actuarial principles and based upon the American Experience Tables of Mortality, and interest at 4 percent per annum, compounded annually. The amount so appropriated will be set aside in a fund on the first day of the calendar year for which appropriated. The appropriation for the calendar year 1925 shall not be in excess of $100,000,000.

In looking over the history of this fund, which is a trust fund created by mandate of Congress, to make sure that the adjusted-service certificates will be paid when due in 1945, I find that the Congress in 1925 appropriated $100,000,000; in 1926 Congress appropriated for the sinking fund $120,000,000, $50,000,000 of that in the first appropriation bill and $70,000,000 in the deficiency bill; in 1927, $116,000,000; in 1928, $112,000,000; and in 1929, $112,000,000; in 1930, $112,000,000; in 1931, $112,000,000; and in 1932, $112,000,000. Then we passed an act providing for 50-percent loans on these certificates, and to meet these loans and adjusted-service certificates in 1932, $203,925,000 was appropriated.

This brought the sinking fund, according to actuarial figures, up to date. In looking over the appropriations since the present administration came into power, I find a little different picture.

In 1933 there was appropriated $100,000,000 for the sinking fund, but in 1934 only $50,000,000, in 1935 only $50,000,000, and this bill carries $100,000,000.

I believe it is the duty of this Congress, especially at this time, when there is an unlimited pending program, with the prospect of spending some $4,000,000,000, which, as the press informs us, the President has asked Congress not to earmark, it is important that we do not impair and imperil this trust fund. The veterans have the right to have their adjusted certificates protected from impairment.

I called on the Veterans' Bureau for the information, and I was told that it would take $40,000,000 to bring the sinking fund up to date. I do not want to see the money of this trust that rightfully belongs in the Treasury for the benefit of the veterans of the World War depleted or neglected. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the trust fund to which the gentleman refers is in no danger whatever. Whatever the Government owes on the adjusted-compensation certificates will be paid when it becomes due. It has been the policy of the administration to periodically put an amount in this fund; $112,000,000 was the amount carried for many years. Then, as was suggested by the gentleman from New York, when we passed the bill allowing them to borrow 50 percent on their adjusted compensation, the amount was reduced to $50,000,000. This year we have put in the amount recommended by the Veterans' Administration and the Bureau of the Budget.

So it is simply a question of bookkeeping—whether the money is put in there or not—but it does affect the balances of the Government; and the fact, as the gentleman states, that we are called upon to expend vast sums for recovery is one reason why we should not increase this amount. No dependent has been deprived of a single dollar due him. The Government stands ready at any time to meet its full obligation, and we have given the amount recommended by the Budget. I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman tell us what the actuarial estimate is for this year?

Mr. WOODRUM. The actuarial estimate is $140,000,000.

Mr. CULKIN. For this year?

Mr. WOODRUM. But we have never put in the fund the actuarial estimate, this year or any other year, in this fund or the civil-service retirement fund. That has never been the policy of the administration.

Mr. CULKIN. Is not that an avoidance of the statute which the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] just read?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think it is.

Mr. REED of New York. It certainly violates the spirit of it. The idea is to keep that fund up. It is stated in the newspapers—and I do not think it is disputed—that while they exact from the civil-service employees their contributions, yet the Government is in arrears in that fund by millions of dollars.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, the Government will meet its obligations when the bill is presented.

Mr. REED of New York. Perhaps it will and perhaps it will not. We may be spending a 10-cent dollar if this keeps on.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, no, we will not; because we have an administration that is not going to conduct the Government on that kind of basis. It will meet its obligations whenever due.

Mr. REED of New York. It certainly is not now by increasing the debt by $4,000,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is a difference of opinion respecting that matter, which I shall demonstrate to the gentleman in a moment when we vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were—ayes 58, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. In expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade, advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year, and then only to the next higher rate: Provided further, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service; or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed, as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act; (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade, in the same or different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit; (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law; or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 35, line 9, strike out the word "further" after the word "provided."

Mr. WOODRUM. It is surplusage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 8 (a) and (b) of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, is hereby continued in full force and effect during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against section 4 that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. This is a provision which continues the mandatory 30-year retirement, which is discretionary with the department.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is apparent to the Chair that section 4 is legislation on an appropriation bill and subject to the point of order. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the section numbers and totals will be corrected in accordance with the action of the Committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill with the several amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PARSONS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3410, the independent offices appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. COSTELLO, for 1 day, on Monday, January 14, 1935, on account of personal business.

THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting therein a speech on the subject of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by our colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of Congressman FRANK HANCOCK over WJSV, Columbia Broadcasting System, 11 p. m., Washington, D. C., Wednesday, November 21, 1934:

It should be very encouraging to our people, and particularly our bankers and business men, to know that Washington is no longer a city of the desperate expedients and frantic economic battles necessary in the early part of this administration to hold things together until the familiar processes could be induced to resume their normal activities. Most of the new economic policies set in motion by the President and the Congress have proven to be effective and constitute a sound foundation for new and profitable business activity. Perhaps at no time in our history has there been a larger base to support sound expansion of credit. Truly it may be said that America has regained its balance, and today we begin to see the first indications of a definite revival of business. It is comforting to see it shaking itself free from the fear that has gripped it and take the first faltering steps which, as its strength grows, will bring the progress we know is to come. I look upon this promise of increased business activity as a vote of confidence in the administration and as a sign that it is anxious to cooperate. Here in Washington it is reflected in the plans that are going forward to smooth out the rough spots in what last year had to be emergency legislation and the cessation of certain Government activities in favor of private enterprise. Almost every phase of our daily lives has been affected in some measure by the laws passed in those strenuous days.

To my mind the most important achievements of the Government under the new deal had to do with banking. Wide-spread failures among banks had begun as far back as 1921 and even in 1923 and 1924, years we look upon now as having been abnormally prosperous, over 1,400 banks closed their doors.

While the immediate task of opening the banks was being carried on through State and national authorities, Congress was setting itself to finding an answer to the swelling plea for deposit protection and to searching out ways of keeping the banks more permanently sound in the future. In June 1933 the Banking Act was approved as a means of strengthening the banks and protecting their deposits.

Many of its provisions were included for the purpose of promoting sound banking. But one of its most important sections created a Federal agency to insure bank deposits, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Much of the credit for bringing this Corporation into existence must go to Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, my fellow Congressman and Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives. The 15-year struggle he made for some type of deposit protection by the Government should bring him the gratitude of every citizen.

When President Roosevelt wisely and courageously closed all the banks in the country in March 1933 one of the most disastrous 12-year periods in American banking was brought to an end. The effects of it were probably felt by almost every pocketbook. Practically 14,000 banks had closed, tying up deposits of our citizens amounting to over $5,000,000,000.

It was natural that such a spectacle should sap the confidence people had in banks. Something had to be done. The moratorium called a halt to the mad panic of depositors, but confidence in the banks was destroyed. It had to be restored. Banks had to be reopened so that business could proceed more normally. It was agreed that they should be opened as rapidly as they were found to be in a safe condition. The public was demanding some type of protection for their money. An answer had to be found quickly for that problem.

It was provided in that law that all national banks and all banks which were members of the Federal Reserve System should automatically become insured. All other banks were free to apply for the insurance and were to be insured by the Corporation if they were found to be in a solvent condition. Today depositors in over 14,000 banks have the protection of this insurance. That is almost 90 percent of the banks in the country. Almost 50,000,000 accounts in these banks are insured and all but three out of every hundred of them are being fully protected by the present insurance limit of $5,000.

But I want to see every bank in the country giving this protection to its depositors. It is the right of every citizen to have this protection, and I shall bend my efforts to seeing that he gets it.

Mr. Leo T. Crowley, the present Chairman of the Insurance Corporation, has made many suggestions which he believes will improve the effectiveness of the insurance you are now being given. They entail changes in the law. I am in favor of most of them and will do whatever I can to see these enacted into law. His suggestions are for more severe requirements for bank membership in the insurance fund. Solvency is now the only requirement. This was as far as we could go at the time the law was enacted.

But now, sound management of a sound bank should be added. In that connection the right to dismiss a bank from enjoyment of insurance on evidence of repeated unsound practices might well be made a power of the Corporation.

The Deposit Insurance Corporation needs the power, under specified conditions, to purchase assets from banks in difficulty. This would give it an opportunity to ward off many bank failures and thus prevent drains on its own funds and upon those of insured banks. Unlimited assessments against insured banks could be avoided by providing for a regular annual one. Banks would then know what their expense was to be and the Insurance Corporation would be put on a basis more nearly conforming to that of the types of insurance companies with which you are already familiar.

Above all, Mr. Crowley favors retaining the present limit of insurance, $5,000. The great mass of depositors, you and I, the "average man", would be fully protected by it. The permanent insurance law calls for insurance of larger amounts. That is unnecessary and might easily react to weaken the protection we now get.

Those are all sound suggestions. They are conservative. But, in my opinion, he has not gone far enough. As we all know, credit is the lifeblood of business. Ninety percent of commercial transactions is carried on with check or credit currency and Government should never again leave its entire control in private banking hands. Some sound, cooperative system is essential to insure proper functioning and adequate protection of our new economic system. With certain amendments to the Federal Reserve Act, bringing the Federal Reserve System closer to the Government to insure the exercise of some proper and effective regulation over the expansion and contraction of credit, I would recommend that it be compulsory that all banks join the Federal Reserve System and thereby be compelled to bring the enjoyment of deposit insurance to their depositors. I believe that Government supervision of the banks and protection of their depositors should be extended to include all banks. Perhaps the founding of a central bank is unnecessary, but certainly we need a unified banking system in this country in place of the present 49 degrees of regulation. Without a unified system there can be no effective uniformity of supervision. In your interest I believe these things should be done. However, let's revert again to deposit insurance and see what it means to you. That's what you want to know.

It means that if you do business with an insured bank and it should ever close, the money you have on account there which falls within the insurance limit will be immediately returned to you by the Insurance Corporation. This is done with remarkably little red tape. All the paying officials ask is that you present your passbook or some other evidence that you have money in the closed bank.

Payment of the depositors in seven closed insured banks has already been made by the young Corporation. There were almost 14,000 of them, and 99 percent of them were paid all the money they had in the bank. The remaining one out of a hundred received $5,000 of his money, the rest to be paid him from funds gotten from the sale of the bank's assets.

In each of those seven banks payment of the depositors was begun within 10 days of the time it was decided the bank would have to be closed. If you have ever been among the depositors of a bank which failed before this insurance went into effect, you can see even more easily than the rest of us what this prompt action has meant for those 14,000 depositors. Their money was tied up for scarcely any time at all, whereas many of those who were depositors in the banks which failed prior to 1933 even yet have not been paid.

It is pleasing to note in that connection, however, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is fast making money available to those banks with which to pay their depositors and that nearly $1,000,000,000 have already been loaned to them.

Although the first duty of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is to protect bank deposits and to pay the depositors of insured banks which fail, it has also been instrumental in the rebuilding of the banking structure of the country, so that today it is probably in as good a position as it has ever been.

I believe that individual bankers sometimes lose sight of the importance their banks have as a part of the economic structure. Basically a bank has two functions. It must serve as a safe place in which money earned by members of its community may be deposited. It must use that money wisely and efficiently so that the community as a whole may grow and prosper. Of paramount importance is the safety of the bank which depends upon its ability to operate profitably. In my opinion, the day of banking as a career is past, but as a profession it is in its infancy. Since it is a community servant it must first fulfill that duty.

Realization of that duty was brought home by the banking crisis and now, through the cooperation of the Insurance Corporation, Comptroller of Currency, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and other Government agencies, banks throughout the country are putting themselves on a sound basis to serve their communities. Coupled with the protection offered their depositors by deposit insurance, this is rapidly reacting to restore confidence and abolish the fear of banks that people had even as late as a year ago.

The Corporation has received many letters telling of money that has come out of hoarding and gone back into banks. This is as it should be. Money in the mattress is doing its owner little good and is actually a hindrance to community progress. I can readily understand why many people withdrew their money from banks at a time when banks were toppling on every side. But that time is past now.

It is particularly for the people who are saving money for their old age, to pay for their homes, for the education of their children and for other worthwhile things that Congress created the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. It was on the money put in banks by this thrifty class of citizens that our country's success was built. The Government is now giving them the assurance that the money they deposit will always be available.

Deposit insurance does many things. The bankers, for instance, whose banks are insured need not fear runs. Depositors know there is no reason to withdraw their money from an insured bank because of some whispered rumor. In other words, deposit insurance has given them renewed confidence in their bank. It has helped in restoring the banker's confidence in himself. The consequent feeling of security is making it possible for them to again play the important part they should in the business life of their communities.

Again, bank failures of former times always seriously crippled credit in the communities of closed banks. Borrowers had to be pressed for payment in order to secure funds with which to pay off deposit demands. Assets had to be sacrificed for immediate sale for the same purpose. Now, when an insured bank closes, receivers begin the process of liquidation just as they always did. But at the same time the Insurance Corporation is paying the claims of depositors. Everyone receives his money to the limit of the insurance right away. The result is that debtors need not be pressed for early payments, nor is it necessary for receivers to sell valuable assets in what may be a depressed market.

One of the advantages of deposit insurance has been given little emphasis. Failure of an insured bank no longer need leave its community without banking facilities. The bank set-up by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to pay off the depositors also has the power to conduct an ordinary banking business. In those communities where a bank is actually needed, this can be of incalculable benefit.

There is one point I should like to stress and upon which I have not as yet touched. Perhaps you have been asking the question to which it is the answer.

Where does the money come from with which the Insurance Corporation pays the claims of depositors in closed banks? There is a backlog fund coming from the Federal Reserve banks and the Treasury of the United States. But in the long run its funds come from the banks themselves. Its present possible resources amount to about a half billion dollars, and can be expanded under the act to $2,000,000,000. Regular annual assessments levied against insurable deposits, which I have already recommended, would build the fund up far beyond that figure and give your deposits an added cushion of safety.

But what I want to stress is this: When the Corporation's money is called into use to pay the depositors of some closed bank, it is not a gift to them. In return for it they assign their claim against the bank to the Corporation. On the basis of these claims the Corporation is repaid from the proceeds of liquidation of the closed bank. And since depositors are paid on the basis of the $5,000 limit the Corporation has an excellent chance for complete return of its money. You see, then, that what actually happens in a bank failure is that the Insurance Corporation steps into your shoes and does the waiting you would otherwise be forced to do.

One other thing I should like to emphasize in closing: Insurance of deposits by a Federal agency is a permanent part of the banking law. There should be changes tending to strengthen it, but the Government feels that however strong the banks may become, the depositors of the Nation should have this added protection as an assurance of the sanctity of their savings.

With a unified system and deposit insurance protection under able and honest governmental direction, the phrase "under Government supervision and protection" will really mean something to the public.

THE FRAZIER-LEMKE BANKRUPTCY AMENDMENT—MORATORIUM

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the opinion of Judge Dawson on the Frazier-Lemke amendment to the Bankruptcy Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, the Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium amendment, subsection S, to section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act, has now been in operation for about 7 months. During that brief space of time it has had a stormy existence. Unfortunately, when the act was passed, the newspapers and other sources of information spread misleading propaganda concerning the amendment; some of it innocent, some of it not so innocent. The public was misinformed as to the aims and the purposes of the act, and we may state that even courts became prejudiced because of this propaganda. Some of these courts unconsciously accepted as true some of the propaganda spread throughout this Nation against this bill.

In spite of these facts, hundreds and thousands of insolvent farmers have become solvent under the act. They have scaled down their debts to somewhere near their present values and within their ability to pay. Hundreds and thousands of farm homes have been saved. The act has met our highest expectation. In fact, 9 out of every 10 farmers who are insolvent and who take advantage of this act are now able to scale down their debts even before they get to the conciliator. The fact that these farmers now have something to say about their own affairs, have the power to save their homes, has made 9 out of every 10 creditors reasonable. It is no exaggeration to say that at least several hundred thousand homes have been saved and farm foreclosures avoided because of this act. No act passed by Congress in recent years has accomplished so much good, with so much opposition and misunderstanding, in such a short period of time.

Immediately upon its passage, the constitutionality of this bill was questioned. United States District Judge Chestnut, of Maryland, held it unconstitutional. His decision was partially accepted by United States District Judge Way, of Virginia. These were the first two decisions. The opinion of these two judges no doubt was influenced by the above-mentioned misleading propaganda.

On October 14 United States District Judge Charles I. Dawson, of Louisville, Ky., in an able and exhaustive opinion, held the act constitutional. His opinion was followed by a favorable decision by United States District Judge John F. Symes, of Colorado. Since then United States District Judges John E. Martinson and Heartsill Ragon, of Arkansas, Walter C. Linley, of Illinois, Oliver B. Dickinson, of Pennsylvania, Fred M. Raymond, of Michigan, and others have followed the opinions of Judges Dawson and Symes and held the act constitutional. An appeal from the decision of Judge Dawson was taken to the circuit court of appeals and the case argued and submitted in Cincinnati. An appeal from the decision of Judge Chestnut was taken and argued and submitted to the United States circuit court of appeals at Charlotte. From the decision of these two courts an appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States for the final determination of the constitutionality of the act.

May we suggest that most of the judges of the United States district courts have, and are construing this act unbiasedly, so as to carry out the intentions of Congress. However, a few judges have construed every possible point of this act against the debtor farmer, and in favor of the creditors. They have deliberately sought to defeat the aims and purposes of the act. These have erroneously held that the act does not apply during the period of redemption, they have even gone to the extent of holding that unless the creditors give their consent, that then the farmer is helpless, and cannot proceed under section 75, including subsection S. These judges represent the dying shadows of a past civilization. They place property rights above human rights. If these judges had been unbiased, and had read section 75, including subsection S, together with the debates on the floor of Congress, they would not have come to such erroneous conclusions. Unfortunately, the farmers in these judges' districts are not in a financial position to appeal from such biased and uncalled-for decisions. We suggest that the attorneys in those districts ask these judges to review their decisions, or to grant new trials.

Under subsection S the farmers who are insolvent or who are in distress and unable to meet their present obligations as they become due, will be able to protect their homes, their lands and personal property, and scale down all their indebtedness to the present values of such property and pay for same on the installment plan. It makes no difference whether such property is mortgaged or whether such debts are secured or unsecured. Under this amendment such debts can all be scaled down to the present value of the farmer's property. After the farmer's exemptions are set aside under the State laws, he can select any or all of the remainder of his property and remain in possession under the control of the court of the part so selected and pay the appraised present value under the terms and provisions of the act as amended. In other words, the act provides a method by which an insolvent farmer can become solvent.

This is a conservation act. Nobody will lose anything; it conserves property and values. The creditors will get the present value of the property—that is all they can now get or that they are entitled to. This act gives to the creditors all past efforts, earnings, and accumulations of the debtor, his wife, and his children, but it does prevent them from taking the future earnings and accumulations of the debtor, his wife, and his children. It prevents peonage and serfdom. In fact, they will get more under this amendment than they ever would get by wrecking another million farm homes. The agricultural wealth of this Nation can and will now be preserved in the hands of those who created it—the farmers. This act will give new courage, hope, and aspirations to distressed agriculture.

May I also suggest to the creditors that if they are fair and reasonable that most cases can be adjusted outside of court. No creditor or set of creditors have a right to destroy society—have a right to destroy agriculture—the basic industry of this Nation. No hard-boiled, soulless corporation will be allowed to demand the last pound of flesh or to extract the last drop of blood out of agriculture—to destroy the goose that lays the golden egg.

Prior to this amendment the bankruptcy act generally was an instrument of destruction—it put an end to a person's accumulated efforts and left him high and dry to start anew. In fact, our Bankruptcy Act as well as all of our laws heretofore made, were for the purpose of protecting the creditor at the expense of the unfortunate debtor. This was done under the pretext of honest debts—but nothing was ever said about the dishonest dollar with which those so-called "honest" debts were to be paid. A dollar whose value could be and was manipulated so that it took 15 times as much wheat in October 1932 to buy that dishonest dollar as it did in May 1917. In other words, in May 1917, 1,000 bushels of wheat would have bought $3,890 in Minneapolis, but on October 18, 1932, it would have taken about 15,000 bushels of wheat to buy that same number of dishonest dollars, and what is true of wheat was true of other farm commodities.

This amendment marks a new epoch. From now on the debtor is going to be considered as well as the creditor. The Bankruptcy Act is going to become an act of conservation and not an act of wreckage. It will undoubtedly in future Congresses be extended to include all debtors—business concerns as well as farmers—all will be recognized as going concerns. Property and wealth will be conserved in the hands of those who created it—not destroyed. Society as a whole will protect itself against unreasonable creditor individuals and corporations. Hope and aspiration will again return to our people as a whole.

EXCERPTS FROM JUDGE DAWSON'S OPINION

Undoubtedly the Constitution vests in Congress the power to pass laws which are territorially uniform, dealing with the relation of creditor and debtor, when the debtor is unable or unwilling to discharge his indebtedness in full. Whatever once may have been the doubt of courts and law writers as to the scope of the phrase "laws on the subject of bankruptcies", as used in the Constitution, it is now settled that this power of Congress is not limited nor circumscribed by the English bankruptcy acts in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. * * *

"It extends to all cases where the law causes to be distributed the property of the debtor among his creditors; this is its least limit. Its greatest is the discharge of a debtor from his contracts. And all intermediate legislation, affecting substance and form, but tending to further the great end of the subject—distribution and discharge—are in the competency and discretion of Congress." * * *

Therefore, the bankruptcy provision of the Constitution cannot be regarded as a power conferred upon Congress to be exercised solely for the benefit of creditors. Subject to the requirement of uniformity, it is a grant of plenary power over the subject of bankruptcies, and while, of course, Congress, under the pretext of executing this power, cannot pass laws dealing with matters not intrusted to the National Government (Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U. S. 251; Child Labor Case, 259 U. S. 20), yet so long as the legislation is fairly within the constitutional grant the public policy exemplified therein is exclusively within congressional discretion. * * *

A fundamental essential of all bankruptcy laws under the Constitution is the reasonably prompt distribution among his creditors of the value of the property of the debtor unable or unwilling to pay his debts; but I cannot believe that this necessarily requires a sale of the bankrupt's property under competitive bidding. If the law provides for a realization of the fair value of the debtor's property by some other method than by such a sale, and for a distribution among the creditors according to their rights of the sum thus ascertained, the same general purpose is accomplished as would be accomplished by a sale, and, therefore, it seems to me entirely within the competency of Congress to provide for a determination of the value of the debtor's property subject to distribution by some other method than by a sale under competitive bidding. Hence, there is no constitutional impediment against Congress providing that in a bankruptcy proceeding the actual fair value of the debtor's property subject to distribution shall be ascertained by appraisers appointed by the court, such appraisal to be made under the supervision and subject to the control of the court; nor to prevent Congress from designating the order of priority in which interested parties may be permitted to elect to pay the appraisal price and take the property. Furthermore, there can be no doubt that Congress can validly provide for the payment of this appraisal value within such a reasonable time, as it may determine; and it is entirely within the power of Congress to provide that the deferred payments shall not bear interest. Again, there can be no doubt of the power of Congress to require all of the bankrupt's property, including that covered by mortgages or other encumbrances, to be administered in the bankruptcy court, free from the interference of State tribunals; otherwise, the Constitution of the United States and the laws passed in pursuance thereof would not be the supreme law of the land, as they are declared to be in clause 2, article VI, of the Constitution.

Measured by these principles, it seems to me that the act in question deals only with matters within the competency of Congress under the bankruptcy provision of the Constitution. It provides for adjudicating the debtor a bankrupt, and subjects all of his property to the control of the bankruptcy court. It provides for the distribution among his creditors, according to their respective rights, of the value of all of the debtor's property which is subject to his debts. It provides that this value shall be determined by an appraisal, but it is careful to set up ample safeguards against either overappraisal or underappraisal of the property. The appraisers are not bound by the market price at the time of the appraisal, but under the act are free to take into consideration all relevant factors in determining the true value of the property. The right objections, exceptions, and appeal is made available to interested parties. * * *

The act gives to the debtor the sole right to become the purchaser of any part of the property from the trustee at the appraised value thereof, and to pay for same in installments extending over a period of 6 years, with interest at 1 percent; but this right is predicated upon the consent of the lien holders. The fact that the consent of the general creditors and of the trustee is not required cannot be taken advantage of by the bank in this case, as it is not a general creditor except as to the excess of its debt over the appraisal value of the property in lien to it; but, in my judgment, this provision of the act would be valid even though the consent of no class of creditors were required, provided the terms of the payment of the appraisal value fixed in subsection 3 of the act are not so unreasonable as against creditors as to violate one of the fundamental essentials of bankruptcy acts, viz, the distribution to creditors, within a reasonable time, of the value of the property of the bankrupt subject to distribution; but this question will be discussed later in the opinion in connection with my discussion of subsection 7. As heretofore indicated, appraisal of the property of the debtor under the safeguards contained in the act is fairly calculated to secure for creditors a full and fair value of the property. If this is done, no creditor has the right to complain because the debtor is given the sole right to become the purchaser at this price. In bankruptcy proceedings the holder of a lien on property certainly has no constitutional right to demand that he be allowed to become the purchaser of the property covered by his lien. If he is allowed to realize on this property the full value thereof for application to his lien debt, no right of his has been violated. Indeed, I know of no constitutional inhibition against State laws providing that in foreclosure proceedings under State law the value of encumbered property shall be determined by an appraisal under proper safeguards to protect the interest of the lien holder, and giving the debtor the prior right to become the purchaser of the encumbered property at the appraisal price.

Counsel for the bank advanced the suggestion that those provisions of the act permitting the debtor to become the purchaser of his property at its appraisal value under the terms therein stated is, in effect, a composition with his creditors, and therefore do not relate to the subject of bankruptcies within the constitutional sense. I do not think this contention is sound. In the first place, those provisions of the act are not the equivalent of a composition, because a composition settlement with creditors may or may not result in the distribution of the entire value of the debtor's property to his creditors. His creditors may agree to a composition settlement which will result in the payment of less money than the full value of his property; and if approved by the court, under the present bankruptcy law, the bankrupt is entitled to be repossessed of his property and discharged of his debts, provided he has made a full disclosure of his property and has been guilty of no fraud in connection with the composition settlement. The provisions of the act referred to, however, when fairly construed, require the debtor, if he takes over the property under its terms, to pay the full fair value of same as determined by an appraisal under the terms of the act. Even should those provisions of the act, however, be construed as the equivalent of a composition settlement, such a construction would not make the act unconstitutional. * * *

It is contended by counsel for the bank that the act requires a reduction of the claims of creditors, whether they consent to such reduction or not. Such a conclusion can only result from a superficial consideration of the act. As I read it, the act nowhere requires any such scaling down of debts. It devotes the fair value of the entire property of the debtor, other than his exemptions, to the payment of the claims of his creditors. As to secured claims, if the appraisal value of the pledged property is less than the amount of the secured debt, the deficiency, including interest, can be proven as a general claim and participate in the distribution of the appraisal value of the unencumbered property ratably with the other unsecured claims. Of course, when the value of the bankrupt's estate is not sufficient to pay his debts in full, the practical effect of a discharge is to reduce the claims of creditors, but such is the effect of a discharge under any bankruptcy law. * * *

This subsection (7) postpones the right of sale of the debtor's property for 5 years, with the privilege to the debtor during that time to occupy and use same, provided he pays a reasonable rental therefor, and to become the purchaser thereof at any time during that period, as therein provided. Certainly Congress has the power to prohibit the sale of the assets of a bankrupt for a reasonable length of time after the court takes possession of same and to authorize the trustee or other representative of the creditors or officer of the court to rent same during the waiting period. If it possesses this power, why may not Congress authorize the property to be rented to the debtor? Possessing the power to delay the sale of a bankrupt's assets and to authorize the rental thereof in the meanwhile to the debtor, why may not Congress also provide that at the end of the waiting period, or prior thereto, the debtor may become the purchaser of the property by paying in cash the appraisal value thereof? Frankly, I can see no constitutional impediment to such legislation on the part of Congress if that body deems it in the furtherance of sound public policy. * * *

Is the waiting period of 5 years such an unreasonable delay in the distribution of the property of the bankrupt to his creditors as to amount to a denial of due process? It seems to me that this resolves itself into the question of whether such a period of delay substantially denies to the creditors the right of a distribution of the bankrupt's assets. It must be accepted that it was the judgment of Congress that it does not, and this judgment must be weighed in the light of the conditions confronting Congress when the law was enacted. Courts may take judicial notice of universally recognized facts. At the time this legislation was enacted the Nation was going through the severest financial depression in its entire history. Values of all property, and particularly of farm property, had not only sunk to unprecedented levels, but there was no market for it even at these levels. In legislating on matters committeed to it by the Constitution, Congress undoubtedly may give thought to public policy and the general welfare. Within the scope of its delegated powers it may legislate for the general welfare, just as States may do under their police power. The Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321; Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S. 45; Caminetti v. United States, 242 U. S. 470. Unquestionably, it is desirable that the sacrifice of farm property and the dispossession of farmers shall be avoided, so far as constitutionally may be done with fairness to others, during an emergency such as now prevails. It was the judgment of Congress that through the medium of bankruptcy proceedings the farmer should be given 5 years within which to rehabilitate himself and save his property. Discretion on this subject, within constitutional bounds, rests with Congress, and I am not prepared to say that these bounds have been exceeded in the legislation under consideration. * * *

THE SUGAR SITUATION

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein a statement made by the Michigan Republican delegation on the sugar situation, as expressed in a letter to Secretary Wallace.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Some days ago I sought to insert in the RECORD a manuscript as a part of the revision of my remarks on a certain subject, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the distinguished minority leader, stated that it was about time we reached some agreement on what extraneous matter could go into the RECORD. I have never tried to be a censor or a literary editor of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but the point was made against me. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] specifically referred to editorials, letters, telegrams, and other matter. I am going to object until we get a settlement of this matter.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I understood that the gentleman from Michigan, in making his request, asked to extend his own remarks, a letter which he himself wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture. The gentleman from North Carolina does not object to the gentleman from Wisconsin at any time putting his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. That is exactly the position that I took.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from North Carolina specifically referred to editorials, telegrams, and letters, which were not a part of the matter referred to in the remarks on the floor.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman from North Carolina did not mean letters which the gentleman from Wisconsin wrote, but every Member of the House has numbers and numbers of letters from constituents; and if those were inserted in the RECORD, there would be no end to it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from North Carolina knows that he specifically referred to letters, editorials, and telegrams; and in agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] he decided that extraneous matter should not be included in the RECORD. I was prevented from putting into the RECORD a matter which was of great interest to the people of my district and to the people of the United States, namely, recommendations of the chief of police of my city upon the things necessary to make a large city free from crime.

Mr. SNELL. We do not object to anything you want to extend in the RECORD of your own, such as your own letters.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a matter that occurred between a Congressman and a department. Surely the gentleman from Wisconsin would not object to that.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman in his own remarks, in objecting to my request, said that he would object until this thing was settled. I am not trying to be the literary editor of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I would like to know just what can go into that RECORD so my requests will not be objected to, as they were last Monday.

Mr. SNELL. So far as I am concerned, anything of the gentleman's own composition, his own letters, can go in. That is all the gentleman from Michigan is asking at the present time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then I understand that from now on letters written by Members and telegrams may go in the RECORD.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I withdraw my reservation of objection if it is his own letter.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a statement made by the Republican delegation from Michigan on the sugar situation, as expressed in the following letter to Secretary Wallace:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1935.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Associated Press released under a Miami, Fla., date line, January 8, the following statement:

"MIAMI, FLA., January 8.—Jefferson Caffery, United States Ambassador to Cuba, arrived here yesterday in a Navy plane from Habana.

"He will leave tonight by train for Washington, where he plans to lay before the State Department a number of problems vitally affecting the island republic.

"Among these, he said, were the political and economic questions.

"Outstanding among these is the sugar problem. He declined to discuss in detail the various matters which he will take up in Washington.

"The American Ambassador said he intended to arrive back here about Saturday and return to the Cuban capital by Navy plane."

We, of course, know that you are familiar with all of the facts in the case pertaining to the operation of the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act and with the recent activities on the part of the Cuban Government and certain sugar operators and banking houses in New York and the situation which developed with reference to December sugar-futures contracts. Accordingly, we do not at this particular moment desire to take your time in reciting detailed information which is already in your files.

However, in the interest of the sugar-beet growers of the State of Michigan in particular and those farmers engaged in the production of this important crop throughout many other beet-producing States, we cannot overlook registering a protest at this time against further discrimination against the farmers of this country and in favor of the political and economic interests residing in Cuba and American citizens residing in the United States with their money invested in Cuban sugar plantations.

Under date of January 5, the Associated Press carried a Washington date line which states that you, under date of January 5, "set the estimated total United States sugar consumption for 1935 at 6,359,261 short tons." This release also carries the statement that Cuba has been allotted 1,857,022 tons. The release also carries the information that the figures may be revised up or down during the year to meet changes in consumer requirements.

We believe that many people assume the quota allocated to Cuba from time to time under the operation of the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act, together with the fact that the effective duty on sugar coming into this country was reduced from $2 per hundred pounds 96-degree raw sugar to 90 cents per hundred pounds 96-degree raw sugar was to cover the economic relief to be given to Cuba insofar as the operation of the sugar industry is concerned. Of course, the new trade treaty with Cuba made possible the total reduction from the $2 down to the 90 cents. With the sugar quotas allocated to the various producing areas through acreage quotas to growers as well as sales quotas to processors, we feel that Cuba has been given all the consideration to which she is entitled, and no doubt a great deal more.

We are mindful of the fact that Cuba is a foreign country and in a position to pass legislation over which our Congress has no jurisdiction. We are also mindful of the fact that the owners of the beet-sugar stocks in this country (being the growers and the processors under the participating contracts which are now so generally in operation) are more or less distressed sellers the first few months of each calendar year, due to the fact that their sugar stocks are so great and that as the sales quotas are operating, Cuba is in a position, through its legislation and operation of the sales policies, to considerably "rig" the market against the American sugar consumers, and, in addition, bring about the situation which happened during the last 2 months of 1934 in connection with sugar contracts.

We hope that no further advantage will be granted Cuba which will be detrimental to the sugar-beet and sugar-cane growers of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

F. L. CRAWFORD, ROY O. WOODRUFF, EARL C. MICHENER, JESSE P. WOLCOTT, CARL E. MAPES, WM. W. BLACKNEY, ALBERT J. ENGEL, GEO. A. DONDERO, CLARE E. HOFFMAN, HENRY M. KIMBALL, CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1935

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose greatness flows around our incompleteness and in whose rest our restlessness subsides, help us to make each day a fresh beginning; help us to find each morn a world made new.

When we are tempted to believe that might has won the title to existence and marks the measure of man's work, reveal to us anew the solemn truth that the tenure of a nation's life is ever coextensive with its morals; that to serve Thee rightly is to love each other, and where pity dwells there peace abides.

Direct us then, O Father, into the way of Him whose blessed work on earth was doing good, that with reverent tread we may follow in the steps of His most holy life. We ask it in His name and for His sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 10, 1935, when, on request of Mr. ROBINSON and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DEATH OF WIFE OF SENATOR FRAZIER

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, on last Thursday I gave notice of my intention to speak today upon the munitions subject. Until this morning it had been my plan to do so; but there has befallen my colleague, Mr. FRAZIER, and his household such sorrow—there has taken place such loss as we must all feel, more or less, by reason of the death of the wife of my colleague early this morning—that I cannot, with good heart or with any spirit, proceed as I had planned. I regret having given this notice, in the light of what has happened, and I desire now to be excused from proceeding today and to give notice of a desire to be heard when I can receive recognition following the convening of the Senate tomorrow.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if there is a session of the Senate on Wednesday, the 16th of January, I give notice that I shall endeavor to seek recognition from the Chair for the purpose of delivering an address on the subject of the fifteenth anniversary of the eighteenth amendment. If there is no session on that day, I shall endeavor to secure the floor at the next session subsequent thereto.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the annual session of the Synod of New Jersey, Presbyterian Church, held in Atlantic City, N. J., favoring the continuance of the investigation of munitions manufacturers, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by a money institute held in Flint, Mich., under the auspices of the American Science Foundation, favoring the enactment of legislation taking from banks now organized or to be hereafter organized for private profit the privilege of issuing money, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Council of the City and County of Denver, Colo., favoring amendment of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act of 1933, or the providing by a new act that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be authorized, empowered, and directed to issue new and additional bonds, and that the activities and work of the Corporation be indefinitely continued, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Graphic Arts Association, Houston-Galveston Region, Tex., relative to the amendment of paragraph 6 of section 585 of the Postal Laws and Regulations permitting the mass mailings of advertising literature, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from W. R. Lence, managing director of the Louisiana Taxpayers' Association, New Orleans, La., relative to moneys and appropriations for relief in the State of Louisiana, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted at a meeting of the New York State Board of Directors of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions adopted by the Orlando (Fla.) Chapter of the Laymen's League of the Unitarian Church, and also by the students, faculty, and staff of Rollins College, of Winter Park, Fla., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MALONEY presented a petition of sundry citizens of West Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against alleged religious intolerance in the Republic of Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Medical Society of the State of New York, favoring the keeping of all features of medical service in any method of practice under the control of the medical profession, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Bar Association of Franklin County, at Ottawa, Kans., favoring the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Hays (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the enactment of legislation repealing section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, relative to the long-and-short-haul clause, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Hays (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of legislation bringing all classes of public carriers under the control and supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Local Lodge No. 292, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, of Parsons; Horton Division, No. 192, of Horton, and Herrington Division, No. 152, of Herington, both of the Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the passage of legislation modifying section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act so as to permit railroads to compete with other unregulated forms of transportation, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MINTON presented resolutions adopted by Frankfort Division, No. 232, Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States is now in session to consider such legislation as may improve the public welfare; and

Whereas the prosperity of the railroads is essentially necessary to promote recovery in the United States; and

Whereas the prosperity of the railroads cannot be assured until they are given full opportunity to compete with unregulated and subsidized carriers on a fair and equitable basis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,, by Frankfort Division, No. 232, of the Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, that the Honorable SHERMAN MINTON, United States Senator from the State of Indiana, be requested by this body, consisting of 422 railway employees, exclusive of their families, to support to the fullest extent enactment of legislation to modify the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act to regulate commerce so as to permit the railroads to compete with unregulated forms of transportation, as recommended by the Federal Coordinator, and covered in the Pettengill bill, H. R. 8100, introduced at the last session of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the United States Senator of our State and that he be requested to present same to the appropriate committee of Congress.

Approved the 7th day of January 1935.

ORDER OF BENEFIT ASSOCIATION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Attest:

R. F. MARTIN,
Secretary Frankfort Division, No. 232.

SEED LOANS

Mr. COSTIGAN. I present a petition, signed by Albert W. Uphoff, of Haxtun, Colo., and 100 other citizens of Phillips County, Colo., with respect to seed loans, with the request that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the body thereof was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas many farmers in our county will not be able to plant a crop in 1935 without some form of credit; and

Whereas the majority of those needing credit are not able to obtain it through a production credit association or any other governmental or private agency; and

Whereas last year's emergency Seed and Food Loan Act was passed after Congress had been in session for some time, which resulted in a number of our farmers not being able to buy seed until the supply was short, prices high, and time for planting was late: Now, therefore,

We, the undersigned farmers of Phillips County, Colo., respectfully petition that one of the first articles of legislation enacted in the coming session of Congress be an act to provide for emergency seed loans in the year 1935.

ALBERT W. UPHOFF (and others).

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. WHEELER presented resolutions adopted by the Northwest Mining Association, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas from the dawn of recorded history until A. D. 1873 the commercial nations of the world used a bimetallic monetary system, the ratio of gold and silver being approximately 16 to 1; and

Whereas the experience of the past 60 years, following the demonetization of silver in 1873, has demonstrated that the single gold standard is an unsatisfactory, unstable, and costly experiment, resulting in world-wide financial chaos and the final forced abandonment of that standard by practically all nations; and

Whereas the United States, as the major world power, is now in position to settle its own monetary policies, without dictation from the international bankers or the governments of the Old World, and there is every reason to believe that the remonetization of silver by the United States would result within 1 year in similar action by every nation with which this country has commercial relations; and

Whereas the administration, under the inspired leadership of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, has already recognized the necessity and importance of taking some steps toward the remonetization of silver but has not yet restored the money of the people to its ancient and stable status: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Northwest Mining Association, comprising producers of gold, silver, lead, zinc, copper, iron, coal, and other minerals, in fortieth annual convention assembled this 15th day of December 1934 in Spokane, Wash., does hereby call upon the President and Congress of the United States to cast off the shackles of the international money changers and to restore to the American people the sound money of their forefathers by the immediate and unconditional remonetization of silver at its historic ratio of 16 to 1; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to both Houses of Congress and be given to the public press.

Recommended by the committee on resolutions, December 15, 1934, and unanimously adopted by the association as of the same date.

ROY H. CLARKE, President.
CHARLES P. ROBBINS, Secretary.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter received this morning from the president of the American Coalition with respect to the World Court.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN COALITION,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1935.

MY DEAR SENATOR: At the annual meeting of the board of directors of the American Coalition the following resolution opposing adherence to the World Court was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the American Coalition stands with George Washington in his Farewell Address when he advised our country to remain politically independent from all foreign entanglements; and

"Whereas we maintain that the League of Nations is a political organization of foreign powers and a membership in its judicial arm, known as the 'World Court', would compromise our political independence, since the feeble voice of America might be but one against a possible 54 States in a vote upon matters pertaining to debts owed the United States, problems of immigrations and other policies, which we have, under wise direction, decided for ourselves in the past: Be it therefore

"Resolved, That the United States decline membership in the World Court."

Allow me to suggest in this connection that there appears to me to be a constitutional objection to the adoption of the protocol now before the Senate inasmuch as article III, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States provides:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish", etc. (emphasis supplied), and section 2 of the same article provides that—

"The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

"In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction", etc. (Emphasis supplied.)

This provision taken in connection with the tenth amendment, which provides that—

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the Sates respectively, or to the people"— would seem to preclude Congress from conferring superior judicial functions upon an agency of a superstate in cases in which the United States may be a party.

In my opinion, the contention that the World Court is a separate organization from the League of Nations, despite the reservations which have been embodied in the protocol, will not stand critical examination. It was stated in the course of a debate upon adherence to the World Court in the legislature of a foreign nation that "Despite all assertions to the contrary, accession to the Court may actually be considered as a rapprochement to the League of Nations itself; after all, facts are facts; they are stronger and speak more clearly than speeches, the more so should such speeches not be correct." If this conclusion was not in itself patent, it certainly is clearly implied by remarks attributed to certain Senators in regard to this project which have been reported in the morning papers today. However this may be, the Members of the Senate will surely recall that article 415 of the Treaty of Versailles refers to the Court as "the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations." (Emphasis supplied.)

The American Coalition cordially supports the principle of a peaceful settlement of international disputes by arbitration for which adequate machinery already exists, but in conclusion allow me to bring to your attention the fact that the decisions of the World Court are by its constitution enforceable by various statutes of the League of Nations, which are police powers too well known to need enumeration here. It does not seem to me possible, in the light of these facts, for any person to deny that the League is in effect an embryonic, if not an actual, superstate, and that adherence to an agency thereof must in effect be in derogation of the sovereignty of the United States. The Senate of the United States under the Constitution, in my opinion, has no power to impair the sovereignty of this Nation.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN B. TREVOR, President.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back certain resolutions without amendment and one with an amendment, and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the following resolutions, reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, without amendment, were severally considered and agreed to:

Senate Resolution 20, submitted by Mr. GLASS on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 21, submitted by Mr. TRAMMELL on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 24, submitted by Mr. FLETCHER on January 7, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-fourth Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to make investigations into all matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report in due course to the Senate the result thereof, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all of the expenses incurred in pursuance hereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

Senate Resolution 38, submitted by Mr. WHEELER on January 10, 1935:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 40, submitted by Mr. WALSH on January 10, 1935:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 228, agreed to May 30, 1934, authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to investigate the "kick-back racket" in public works and construction, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 37) submitted by Mr. HARRISON on January 10, 1935, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "custom", to strike out "currency and coinage matters", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of the Seventy-fourth Congress at such times and places as they may deem advisable; to make investigations into internal revenue, customs, and other matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary; and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all of the expenses of such committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 855) granting a pension to Emma H. Hughes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. AUSTIN:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor hereby is authorized to employ for the remainder of the session of the Senate an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

CORNER IN DECEMBER SUGAR FUTURES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Resolutions coming over from a previous day are in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] expected his resolution, which comes over from the last session, to be considered at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. When the resolution referred to, being Senate Resolution 41, was submitted on the last day when the Senate was in session, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] objected to one phase relating to a request for a recommendation from the Secretary of Agriculture. In consultation this morning with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who are both equally interested in the sugar problem, we have rewritten the resolution. I ask to perfect my resolution by substituting the modified form, which I send to the desk. It will be noted that the preamble has been entirely eliminated. The portion to which the Senator from Arkansas objected has been changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution, as modified, will be read by the clerk for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 41), as modified, as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to report to the Senate (a) all information at the disposal of the Department and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration respecting the so-called "corner" in December sugar futures, and the ultimate results as found by these Government agencies and by the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange; (b) the history of any dealings the Department of Agriculture or the A. A. A. may have had with the merchandising of the 1934 Cuban sugar quota in the United States; (c) the names of all so-called "long" and "short" traders in December sugar futures on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange if available; (b) the names of the members of the board of directors and of the managers of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange and of the personnel of the Cuban Sugar Stabilization Institute; (e) the names of any banks or other financial institutions in the United States known to the Department or the A. A. A. to have been connected with financing, or refusing to finance, the 1934 Cuban sugar crop; (f) the effect, if any, of Cuban price decrees and of the so-called "corner" in December futures upon the sugar-price index in the United States; and (g) any other available information bearing upon additional legislation that may be needed to safeguard the objective of the Jones-Costigan Act or to control commodity dealings on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that the resolution in its present form has the approval of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Those Senators collaborated in the preparation of the so-called "Jones-Costigan Act."

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. In its present form, I make no objection to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am not going to make any objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution, but I wish to make this observation. It has been the practice in the Senate to offer such resolutions and ask for immediate consideration. It seems to be the better practice in reference to resolutions of this kind is that they should first be referred to a standing committee for consideration and report. I shall not in this instance object and thus violate a precedent long established, but it is my purpose to object in the future to the consideration of such resolutions until they shall have been referred to a standing committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question, and I do so because of two inquiries received this morning from Utah, from gentlemen who are deeply interested in the question, as to the effect of the operations upon the domestic market and particularly the effect upon the production and marketing of sugar produced in the beet-sugar sections of our country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have the general conviction that the terms of the Jones-Costigan Act and the establishment of quotas under it either have been used or could be used, as a result of the experience of the last 3 months, by private speculators to exploit the beet-sugar producers. The information is sufficiently elusive that I have been unable by personal effort to secure it. The resolution asks for such official information as may bear upon the general objective and upon the inquiry submitted to me by the Senator from Utah. I believe the information thus sent for will probably justify a more formal inquiry.

Mr. KING. Another inquiry, if the Senator will permit. Is there such close connection between the sugar operators and the coffee operators as that there should be a reference in the resolution to those who are engaged in the buying and selling of coffee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. The commodity exchange in New York, which deals in sugar, is the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the courteous Senator from Michigan has accurately reported the general concurrence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and myself with respect to the resolution of the Senator from Michigan.

Listening to the reading of the resolution it has, however, occurred to me to ask the Senator from Michigan whether he is satisfied that it permits a possible recommendation by the Secretary of Agriculture of the closing of those activities of that part of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange which relates to sugar? The able Senator from Michigan will recall that during the World War the emergency was regarded as sufficient to justify the closing of the sugar exchange, and that Herbert Hoover, who was then one of the advisers of President Wilson, apparently recommended that course.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The resolution will not produce a direct recommendation from the Secretary of Agriculture. The Senator from Colorado will recall that the Senator from Arkansas objected to a request of that character. I believe the resolution will produce information from which the Senate upon its own responsibility may accurately answer the question which the Senator from Colorado submits.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is conceivable that such a recommendation may prove to be in line with the objectives of the sugar act and consistent with the public interest.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the resolution shall be agreed to, I think the RECORD ought to show that, as the Senator from Michigan said, he discussed the subject matter with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and myself this morning. I said I would have no objection to the resolution in its present form.

I did, however, express the feeling that the resolution asks for information which is not within the official responsibility of the Secretary of Agriculture, namely, the names of the long and short traders upon the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. That exchange is not under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. Therefore any information which he might have would not be official information. I think there is no objection to having him supply the Senate with all facts he may have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk a radio address and a letter by myself which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address and the letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, there is a verse which says that the

"Saddest words of tongue or pen
Are these: 'It might have been.'"

I must tell you good people of our beloved United States that the saddest words I have to say are:

"I told you so!"

In January 1932 I stood on the floor of the United States Senate and told what would happen in 1933. It all came to pass.

In March 1933, a few days after Mr. Roosevelt had become President and had made a few of his moves, I said what to expect in 1934. That came to pass.

As the Congress met in the early months of 1934 and I had a chance to see the course of events for that year, I again gave my belief on what would happen by the time we met again this January 1935. I am grieved to say to you that this week I had to say on the floor of the United States Senate, "I told you so!"

How I wish tonight that I might say to you that all my fears and beliefs of last year proved untrue! But here are the facts—

1. We have 1,000,000 more men out of work now than 1 year ago.

2. We have had to put 5,000,000 more families on the dole than we had there a year ago.

3. The newspapers report from the Government statistics that this past year we had an increase in the money made by the big men, but a decrease in the money made by the people of average and small means. In other words, still "the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer."

4. The United States Government's Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation reports that it has investigated to see who owns the money in the banks, and they wind up by showing that two-thirds of 1 percent of the people own 67 percent of all the money in the banks, showing again that the average man and the poor man have less than ever of what we have left in this country and that the big man has more of it.

So, without going into more figures, the situation finally presents to us once more the fact that a million more people are out of work; 5,000,000 more are on the dole, and that many more are crying to get on it; the rich earn more, the common people earn less; more and more the rich get hold of what there is in the country, and, in general, America travels on toward its route to ———.

Now, what is there to comfort us on this situation? In other words, is there a silver lining? Let's see if there is. I read the following newspaper clipping on what our President of the United States is supposed to think about it. It reads as follows:

[From the New Orleans Morning Tribune, Dec. 18, 1934]

"PRESIDENT FORBIDS MORE TAXES ON RICH—TELLS CONGRESSMEN INCREASES MIGHT MAKE BUSINESS STAMPEDE

By the United Press

"WASHINGTON, December 17.—The administration is determined to prevent any considerable increase in taxes on the very rich, many of whom pay no taxes at all, on the ground that such a plan would cause another 'stampede' by business. Word has been sent up to Democratic congressional leaders that it is essential nothing be done to injure confidence. The less said about distribution of wealth, limitation of earned income, and taxes on capital, 'new dealers' feel, the better.

"Repeatedly since the Democrats won a two-thirds majority in both Houses in the congressional elections last month the administration has sought to assure the worker, the taxpayer, and the manufacturer that they had nothing to fear.

"Meantime reports reached the Capital that fear of potential increases in inheritance taxes and gift levies at the coming Congress was in part responsible for the failure of private capital to take up a greater share of the recovery burden."

That ends the news article on what President Roosevelt has had to say.

President Roosevelt was elected on November 8, 1932. People look upon an elected President as the President. This is January 1935. We are in our third year of the Roosevelt depression, with the conditions growing worse. That says nothing about the state of our national finances. I do not even bring that in for important mention, except to give the figures:

Our national debt of today has risen to $28,500,000,000. When the World War ended we shuddered in our boots because the national debt had climbed to $26,000,000,000. But we consoled ourselves by saying that the foreign countries owed us $11,000,000,000 and that in reality the United States national debt was only $15,000,000,000. But say that it was all of the $26,000,000,000 today. Without a war our national debt under Mr. Roosevelt has climbed up to $28,500,000,000, or more than we owed when the World War ended by 2½ billions of dollars. And in the Budget message of the President he admits that next year the public debt of the United States will go up to $34,000,000,000, or 5½ billion dollars more than we now owe.

Now this big debt would not be so bad if we had something to show for it. If we had ended this depression once and for all we could say that it is worth it all, but at the end of this rainbow of the greatest national debt in all history that must get bigger and bigger, what do we find?

One million more unemployed; 5,000,000 more families on the dole, and another 5,000,000 trying to get there; the fortunes of the rich becoming bigger and the fortunes of the average and little men getting less and less; the money in the banks nearly all owned by a mere handful of people, and the President of the United States quoted as saying: "Don't touch the rich!"

I begged, I pleaded, and did everything else under the sun for over 2 years to try to get Mr. Roosevelt to keep his word that he gave to us; I hoped against hope that sooner or later he would see the light and come back to his promises on which he was made President. I warned what would happen last year and for this year if he did not keep these promises made to the people.

But going into this third year of Roosevelt's administration, I can hope for nothing further from the Roosevelt policies. And I call back to mind that whatever we have been able to do to try to hold the situation together during the past 3 years has been forced down the throat of the national administration. I held the floor in the Senate for days until they allowed the bank laws to be amended that permitted the banks in the small cities and towns to reopen. The bank deposit guaranty law and the Frazier-Lemke farm debt moratorium law had to be passed in spite of the Roosevelt administration. I helped to pass them both.

All the time we have pointed to the rising cloud of debt, the increases in unemployment, the gradual slipping away of what money the middle man and the poor man have into the hands of the big masters, all the time we have prayed and shouted, begged and pleaded, and now we hear the message once again from Roosevelt that he cannot touch the big fortunes.

Hope for more through Roosevelt? He has promised and promised, smiled and bowed; he has read fine speeches and told anyone in need to get in touch with him. What has it meant?

We must now become awakened! We must know the truth and speak the truth. There is no use to wait 3 more years. It is not Roosevelt or ruin; it is Roosevelt's ruin.

Now, my friends, it makes no difference who is President or who is Senator. America is for 125,000,000 people and the unborn to come. We ran Mr. Roosevelt for the Presidency of the United States because he promised to us by word of mouth and in writing:

1. That the size of the big man's fortune would be reduced so as to give the masses at the bottom enough to wipe out all poverty; and

2. That the hours of labor would be so reduced that all would share in the work to be done and in consuming the abundance mankind produced.

Hundreds of words were used by Mr. Roosevelt to make these promises to the people, but they were made over and over again. He reiterated these pledges even after he took his oath as President. Summed up, what these promises meant was: "Share our wealth."

When I saw him spending all his time of ease and recreation with the business partners of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., with such men as the Astors, etc., maybe I ought to have had better sense than to have believed he would ever break down their big fortunes to give enough to the masses to end poverty—maybe some will think me weak for ever believing it all, but millions of other people were fooled the same as myself. I was like a drowning man grabbing at a straw, I guess. The face and eyes, the hungry forms of mothers and children, the aching hearts of students denied education were before our eyes, and when Roosevelt promised, we jumped for that ray of hope.

So therefore I call upon the men and women of America to immediately join in our work and movement to share our wealth.

There are thousands of share-our-wealth societies organized in the United States now. We want a hundred thousand such societies formed for every nook and corner of this country—societies that will meet, talk, and work, all for the purpose that the great wealth and abundance of this great land that belongs to us may be shared and enjoyed by all of us.

We have nothing more for which we should ask the Lord. He has allowed this land to have too much of everything that humanity needs.

So in this land of God's abundance we propose laws, viz:

1. The fortunes of the multimillionaires and billionaires shall be reduced so that no one person shall own more than a few million dollars to the person. We would do this by a capital levy tax. On the first million that a man was worth we would not impose any tax. We would say, "All right for your first million dollars, but after you get that rich you will have to start helping the balance of us." So we would not levy any capital levy tax on the first million one owned. But on the second million a man owns we would tax that 1 per cent, so that every year the man owned the second million dollars he would be taxed $10,000. On the third million we would impose a tax of 2 percent. On the fourth million we would impose a tax of 4 percent. On the fifth million we would impose a tax of 8 percent. On the sixth million we would impose a tax of 16 percent. On the seventh million we would impose a tax of 32 percent. On the eighth million we would impose a tax of 64 percent; and on all over the eighth million we would impose a tax of 100 percent. What this would mean is that the annual tax would bring the biggest fortune down to three or four million dollars to the person because no one could pay taxes very long in the higher brackets. But three to four million dollars is enough for any one person and his children and his children's children. We cannot allow one to have more than that because it would not leave enough for the balance to have something.

2. We propose to limit the amount any one man can earn in 1 year or inherit to $1,000,000 to the person.

3. Now, by limiting the size of the fortunes and incomes of the big men we will throw into the Government Treasury the money and property from which we will care for the millions of people who have nothing; and with this money we will provide a home and the comforts of home, with such common conveniences as radio and automobile, for every family in America, free of debt.

4. We guarantee food and clothing and employment for everyone who should work by shortening the hours of labor to 30 hours per week, maybe less, and to 11 months per year, maybe less. We would have the hours shortened just so much as would give work to everybody to produce enough for everybody; and if we were to get them down to where they were too short, then we would lengthen them again. As long as all the people working can produce enough of automobiles, radios, homes, schools, and theaters for everyone to have that kind of comfort and convenience, then let us all have work to do and have that much of heaven on earth.

5. We would provide education at the expense of the States and the United States for every child, not only through grammar school and high school but through to a college and vocational education. We would simply extend the Louisiana plan to apply to colleges and all people. Yes; we would have to build thousands of more colleges and employ a hundred thousand more teachers; but we have materials, men, and women who are ready and available for the work. Why have the right to a college education depend upon whether the father or mother is so well to do as to send a boy or girl to college? We would give every child the right to education and a living at birth.

6. We would give a pension to all persons above 60 years of age in an amount sufficient to support them in comfortable circumstances, excepting those who earn $1,000 per year or who are worth $10,000.

7. Until we could straighten things out—and we can straighten things out in 2 months under our program—we would grant a moratorium on all debts which people owe that they cannot pay.

And now you have our program, none too big, none too little, but every man a king.

We owe debts in America today, public and private, amounting to $252,000,000,000. That means that every child is born with a $2,000 debt tied around his neck to hold him down before he gets started. Then, on top of that, the wealth is locked in a vice owned by a few people. We propose that children shall be born in a land of opportunity, guaranteed a home, food, clothes, and the other things that make for living, including the right to education.

Our plan would injure no one. It would not stop us from having millionaires—it would increase them tenfold, because so many more people could make a million dollars if they had the chance our plan gives them. Our plan would not break up big concerns. The only difference would be that maybe 10,000 people would own a concern instead of 10 people owning it.

But my friends, unless we do share our wealth, unless we limit the size of the big man so as to give something to the little man, we can never have a happy or free people. God said so! He ordered it.

We have everything our people need. Too much of food, clothes, and houses—why not let all have their fill and lie down in the ease and comfort God has given us? Why not? Because a few own everything—the masses own nothing.

I wonder if any of you people who are listening to me were ever at a barbecue! We used to go there—sometimes a thousand people or more. If there were 1,000 people we would put enough meat and bread and everything else on the table for 1,000 people. Then everybody would be called and everyone would eat all they wanted. But suppose at one of these barbecues for 1,000 people that one man took 90 percent of the food and ran off with it and ate until he got sick and let the balance rot. Then 999 people would have only enough for 100 to eat and there would be many to starve because of the greed of just one person for something he couldn't eat himself.

Well, ladies and gentlemen, America, all the people of America, have been invited to a barbecue. God invited us all to come and eat and drink all we wanted. He smiled on our land and we grew crops of plenty to eat and wear. He showed us in the earth the iron and other things to make everything we wanted. He unfolded to us the secrets of science so that our work might be easy. God called: "Come to my feast."

Then what happened? Rockefeller, Morgan, and their crowd stepped up and took enough for 120,000,000 people and left only enough for 5,000,000 for all the other 125,000,000 to eat. And so many millions must go hungry and without these good things God gave us unless we call on them to put some of it back.

I call on you to organize share-our-wealth societies. Write to me in Washington if you will help.

Let us dry the eyes of those who suffer; let us lift the hearts of the sad. There is plenty. There is more. Why should we not secure laws to do justice—laws that were promised to us—never should we have quibbled over the soldiers' bonus. We need that money circulating among our people. That is why I offered the amendment to pay it last year. I will do so again this year.

Why weep or slumber, America?
Land of brave and true,
With castles, clothing, and food for all
All belongs to you.

Ev'ry man a king, ev'ry man a king,
For you can be a millionaire;
But there's something belonging to others,
There's enough for all people to share.
When it's sunny June and December, too,
Or in the wintertime or spring,
There'll be peace without end,
Ev'ry neighbor a friend,
With ev'ry man a king.

UNITED STATES SENATE,

DEAR FRIEND: Two reports are repeatedly published in the newspapers and announced in programs rendered by the big interests in their radio programs. The first report is that I am a man of great means. If I could sell everything I own, which is not much, I could not pay one-half of my debts.

The other report repeatedly printed and circulated is that the speeches and literature which I send out are printed at Government expense. That statement is also false. With the exception of Government bulletins, etc., everything we sent out, including the enclosed document, must be paid for by us. We are frequently unable to pay some of our printing accounts, and, therefore, have to delay sending out articles requested of us until we can find money with which to do so. That fact can be verified by the accounts we have owed to the Government Printing Office.

We do not make any solicitation of you for any help, and are glad of the privilege to send anything we can on request absolutely free, in the hope that those who feel that our cause is just will make known to their neighbors some of the facts which we furnish.

Yours sincerely,

HUEY P. LONG,
United States Senator.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 396) to amend section 1180 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia with respect to usury.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

THE MUNITIONS INDUSTRY

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] wishes to address the Senate briefly at this time. If he desires to do so, I will refrain from a motion I was about to make.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, as a member of the select committee named to investigate the activities of the munitions business, I desire to approve the position taken by members of that committee who have reported to the Senate on the work already accomplished, and to which report they have coupled a request for further funds to continue this work. My colleagues have made a careful and painstaking presentation of many of the outstanding facts produced by this inquiry, and, therefore, I shall refrain from elaborating on these facts which are so startling as to challenge the attention not only of the people of this country but of the entire world.

Because of the broad field to be covered, and the limitations of time and money, the committee has largely restricted its inquiry to the field of combat munitions; but the results obtained must lead all thoughtful citizens to the conclusion that we are dealing with a business capable of creating and which has created situations fraught with grave peril to the peace of the world. The picture so far presented indicates the necessity for the most searching inquiry into the activities and ramifications of the private munitions business of this country and its relations to similar business enterprises of foreign countries.

The Senate has had a most able presentation of facts and arguments from my colleagues on this committee. Certainly the eloquence, candor, and blunt frankness of the able Senators who have preceded me leave little to be said to justify the request of the committee for additional funds. I think Members of the Senate, like the public at large, are impressed with the gravity of the issues and problems presented by the revelations of this inquiry.

We have been made to realize that the work of the committee has not met with approval in quarters where huge private profits, no matter how made, are regarded as sacred. We have been criticized for presuming to ask questions, the answers to which were most embarrassing to men in high places. It is not for me to answer or attempt to answer these criticisms. The people of this country will make answer if they are given an opportunity. It is only fair, however, to say that some men in the munitions industry keenly realize and admit that this business has a most sordid side. These men were frank with the committee, and were honest in justifying their participation in this kind of business with the argument that "if we don't do it, someone else will." They admitted the huge profits which seem to be the very keystone of the arch of this business. Bona fide commissions paid to salesmen were so far out of line with those paid by the average business as to present a bewildering picture to the members of the committee. Graft money paid to public officials, in some cases, was also added to the burden of commissions. Naturally, a business which affords such easy access to huge profits is an attractive business. Doubtless this angle of profit will explain why successful efforts have been made to stifle peace moves. It explains the strange paradox of the private rearming of Germany in the face of international prohibitions. It explains to the average person why gentlemen with impressive titles of nobility have expressed sentiments strangely familiar to prosecutors who have handled underworld problems, and why some business men who disclaim antisocial views seem to find no wrong in business practices that are a frank bid to public corruption.

It is well that the people of this Nation understand these things. It is well that they be advised that some great business enterprises regard as pernicious all moves to make the world safe for peace—safe for the boys who may soon be cannon fodder unless a great change is wrought. These great combines have linked hands with similar combines across the seas to strangle the infant of peace in its cradle.

We have been assured that the committee was indiscreet in bringing to light the fact that men in high places advised bribery as the proper technic in the munitions business. This argument has been coupled with the further one that business will be hurt by such revelations. To those who look upon private profit as the sole end of all worth-while things, such argument may be cogent and convincing. I cannot bring myself to believe that it is sound.

If the Senate was imprudent in creating this committee and in directing it to produce the facts—the cold facts made by the written records and sworn testimony of the men in this business, together with their accredited agents—then the Members of the Senate may find consolation in the splendid maxim of Lord Beaconsfield, "it is better to be imprudent than servile."

As we scan this record of unconscionable profits, bribery, graft, corruption, and the thwarting of international peace moves, let us weigh it in the balances of human judgment with the great army of little boys coming on whose bodies are to be torn and burned with steel, fire, and gas in the next outburst of world insanity, which we are assured is inevitable unless we can check the unhappy greed of men.

Who dares to say that the Senate of the United States has been imprudent in this inquiry? The pending investigation may offend and doubtless does grievously wound the sensibilities of men who have enjoyed vast war profits in the past, and who honestly consider it a form of treason to the Republic to suggest the elimination of private profits in war and in the preparation for war. These men, and those who share their views, doubtless inspired the great amount of propaganda to the effect that it is un-American for us even to consider the proposition of the Government making its own combat munitions. The staggering private profits in the last war, preserved for our bedevilment and bewilderment in the form of a substantial portion of our huge national debt, constitute a better answer to this sort of argument than I can fashion.

I think in viewing this whole matter dispassionately we may conclude that the people may charge us with servility to private munition interests if we do not at least get at the facts that underlie a business that has laid such a heavy hand on the national purse. In any event, and regardless of our own views about this matter, our inquiry into the activities of the munitions business is not nearly so imprudent as one suggested from a private munitions concern that "this is our country and not the country of Congress." I prefer to leave the significance of that blunt statement, with its possessive case, to the judgment of the average man. He can draw his own conclusions as to whether we are prudent in longer refraining from at least inquiring into the activities of a business which refers to this country as "our country." As I look over the record of war profits, I find myself almost tempted to agree with the munitions combine in delicately suggesting that it was their country. Obviously, this country does not belong to Congress. It is equally clear, however, that the Republic is not the chattel of private munitions combines.

Grave abuses have been uncovered. Few can be found to defend them. Most of them were unknown before this inquiry was begun. In fact, some of the sordid things disclosed were only previously hinted at, and brought immediate disclaimers and denials from the munitions business when it deigned to make even a brief reply to those it called muckrakers. Now it must confront the record made by its own hands and from the lips of its own agents and managers.

I hope Members of the Senate feel the necessity and the wisdom of continuing the inquiry with sufficient funds to enable the committee to accomplish the purposes of the resolution calling it into existence. Certainly when the Senate confronts the fact that private shipyards have increased the bid price on a cruiser from $8,000,000 in December 1932 to $16,000,000 in August 1934 there is cause for a most complete and searching inquiry into the reason for this extraordinary demand on the Public Treasury.

Eight million dollars would pay for a lot of Senate investigations. It would feed a lot of hungry people. Certainly the cost of this investigation cannot be the occasion for question while bid prices on war vessels go up 100 percent in 2 years. That sort of an increase in the cost of preparedness will impose a staggering burden on the people of this Nation, and one they can ill afford to bear in these critical times. It will make the new naval program a Roman holiday for private shipbuilders. From my contacts with the men who actively participated in the World War, I am firmly convinced that the great majority of them—perhaps it would not be an exaggeration to say that practically all of them—want the facts about war profits and the commercial side of war brought out into the full light of day so far as we are able to accomplish that end. Large numbers of them have assured me that veterans have become deeply resentful against what has appeared to them to be a determined effort over the past few years to suppress the facts about such profits. Whether or not this charge be true, the fact remains that this large group of our citizens have every legitimate right to call upon us to make a full disclosure. Whatever reasons exist for secrecy in this business are not to be weighed against the right to be fully informed of men who offered their bodies to their country. The sacrifices of these men made war profits possible. If these profits were unconscionable, if the methods employed to gain them were wrong, if the whole theory of private profits in war is wrong, then the soldiers, above all others, should know. Personally, I feel a great responsibility to these men in this matter.

Leading representatives of the private munitions business were asked very definitely just what they thought would result from the ever-increasing expenditures for armaments. Practically without exception their answers expressed grave fears for the financial future of nations engaged in this mad race. Further interrogated as to what they thought would happen in the event of another great international conflict, the answers were also practically unanimous that such a conflict would destroy our western civilization.

Agreeing with these gentlemen, and assuming such statements to be cold facts, I feel wholly free to urge my colleagues to continue the present munitions inquiry. I think most of you will share my belief that the great mass of the American citizens, whose own flesh and blood will pay the price of the next conflict, are highly desirous that we give them the most complete picture possible, to the end that Congress may enact suitable legislation to meet this problem. Anything which rises to the dignity of a threat against civilization itself cannot be disregarded if we are to discharge our duty to the people who sent us here.

"THE MARK OF THE BEAST"

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, St. John the Evangelist, in Revelation, tells us of a vision. He saw coming up out of the sea a monster with seven heads. One of them was wounded and bleeding, and it was healed while he looked at it. Then there came another that ruled in the name of the first monster; and this other placed the mark of the beast upon the brow or the hand of everyone who traded.

The Supreme Court of the United States has recently started removing that mark; and I wish to help, so far as I can, by introducing a bill to strike title I from the bill creating the national racketeers' association.

The bill (S. 926) to repeal title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, the bill I have just introduced has for its purpose, as is seen from its title, the repeal of title I of the National Recovery Act. My amendment leaves intact title II, providing for public works, called the "P. W. A.", and the agricultural relief section.

When in June 1933 the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] introduced a similar amendment to strike out title I, and was joined by Senators on both sides of the aisle, title I had a narrow escape. It was the friends of title II who saved the so-called "Recovery Act." There was strong support for the La Follette-Costigan public-works bill and the Wagner public-works and employment bill, which had made strong headway in the Seventy-second Congress. The only way to secure passage of the public-works measure with administration support was to tie it to the recovery title I, providing for the N. R. A. It was title II that passed title I, and only by this logrolling of the President was it possible.

The trusts and monopolies of America thereby got a suspension of the antitrust laws, for which they had been working for 30 years. The clause for that suspension, giving a free hand to trust exploitation, was the genius of the N. R. A. Two years of industrial "emergency" have been the logical result.

Let us strike out title I, restore the antitrust laws, and repeal the 670 prohibition codes of the national ruin act.

Unless by act Congress at an early date shall terminate at one effective blow the whole brood of 670 monopoly grants called "N. R. A.", they are doomed to a piecemeal death, one by one or in groups, by the laborious and expensive methods of the courts, or by falling down through inherent weakness. If the aim of the Government is efficiency and economy, the logical thing to do is to make an end of the agony by one repealing act.

The 670 codes of N. I. R. A. are, in effect, so many prohibition acts upon normal industry, while extending monopoly grants to the benefited industrial trusts. The codes prohibit the lawful and normal pursuit of every industry and trade, excepting the business in intoxicating liquors covered by the eighteenth amendment. When the country resolved to repeal the Volstead Act, Congress voted for repeal. We did it by one summary act. We did not wait for the long processes of time and slow death. We passed one repeal bill. Why is not that the most efficient and painless method of winding up the 670 prohibition codes of N. I. R. A.?

The Supreme Court has shown us the way in knocking out by a vote of 8 to 1, in the case of the Petroleum Code, the fundamental defect of all the 670 codes, namely, an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to the Executive. If Congress had no constitutional authority to delegate legislative power to the Executive in the case of the Petroleum Code, Congress had no constitutional authority to delegate legislative power to the Executive on any code.

We had no constitutional authority to delegate our legislative power on any measure. That was plain enough from the start. It was pointed out by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] many times, and elaborated by him in a notable address on Delegation of Power, an exhaustive review of a hundred years of the opinions of the United States Supreme Court, all converging in the view announced in the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Hughes in the petroleum case, just settled. It was pointed out by good lawyers on both sides of this Chamber—by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], by the Senators from Virginia, the Old Dominion State which gave the country most of the early Presidents and Chief Justice John Marshall—and I am wondering if any of the 18 lawyers on the Senate Judiciary Committee, including the chairman, the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], entertained in their innermost convictions any materially different view from that now expressed by Chief Justice Hughes, that Congress cannot delegate or abdicate its legislative power lawfully, even though demanded by the irresistible smiling Executive.

The Supreme Court finds, with respect to the delegation of legislative power in the Petroleum Code:

> If section 9 (c) were held valid, it would be idle to pretend that anything would be left upon limitations of the power of the Congress to delegate its lawmaking function. The reasoning of the many decisions we have reviewed would be made vacuous and their decisions nugatory. Instead of performing its lawmaking function Congress could at will and as to such subjects as it chooses transfer that function to the President or other officer or to an administrative body. The question is not of the intrinsic importance of the particular statute before us, but of the constitutional processes of legislation which are an essential part of our system of government.

Whereupon the Court concludes:

> We cannot regard the President as immune from the application of these constitutional principles. When the President is invested with legislative authority as the delegate of Congress in carrying out a declared policy, he necessarily acts under the constitutional restriction applicable to such a delegation.
>
> We see no escape from the conclusion—

Says the Chief Justice—

> that the Executive orders of July 11, 1933, and July 14, 1933, and the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior thereunder, are without constitutional authority.
>
> The decrees of the circuit court of appeals are reversed, and the causes are remanded to the district court with direction to modify its decrees in conformity with this opinion so as to grant permanent injunctions restraining the defendants from enforcing those orders and regulations.
> It is so ordered.

Here we have the first repeal act with respect to the 670 prohibition and monopoly codes of N. R. A. The reasoning in this case is applicable to all acts involving delegation of legislative power by Congress to the Executive and his bureaucracy of 49 bureaus and 13 commissions.

Why wait for the inevitable? Has not Congress the courage to clean its own stable? Why not make the repeal general? Even General Johnson, the famous administrator and chief author of the N. R. A., says, "The N. R. A. is dead as a doornail." He further adds, with excusable gusto, that the present administration thereof has "fleas in the pants."

Moreover, on the day following the Supreme Court decision, the N. R. A. administration itself announced that it would abandon 300 price-fixing and service-ruling codes. This executive repeal of 300 codes, plus one repeal by the Supreme Court, would leave of the original 670 only 269 prohibition acts requiring repeal by Congress. Why not be merciful in shooting the beast outright, instead of prolonging the agony on the installment plan—here cutting off a hind foot, there a forepaw, then a section of the tail or an ear, and finally a whole quarter or a midriff, and the old critter howling and disturbing the whole neighborhood—while the coroner reports, "She is dead as a doornail", and the veterinarian in charge has "fleas in the pants"?

Let us put N. R. A. out of her agony by one repeal act and save several millions in cost of caretakers, veterinarians, medicines, messenger boys and nurses, hospital bills, and patronage "pork." Let us relieve American industry and trade of all these insane prohibitions. Let us give monopoly, whose corporation heads constitute the code authorities, their final walking papers and restore the antitrust laws against their unlawful exploitation of consumers. Let us quit this cracking down on legitimate industries and begin building up American industry as is being done among our competitors in Canada, Europe, Asia, Africa, and South America.

The first codes of the N. R. A. were imposed in July 1933. From July to November that year American industrial production fell about 25 percent—as against a boom in Canada and Great Britain, and as against a rise of about 10 percent in the July-November fall season of even 1932 in the United States.

In 1934 again there was a sharp decline from May to November, whereas in Canada and Great Britain there was a strong uptrend which enabled those countries to wipe out their treasury deficits and show a normal surplus. Is it not time that the United States quit the business of cracking down and cracking up honest enterprises, and again exhibit the Treasury surplus which it enjoyed from 1920 to 1930? Why delay recovery by bold experiments creating planned emergencies? This planned emergency has already added to the unemployed over a million, according to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

It is evident from the President's Budget message that he has planned an emergency extension until 1936. Having expended $4,000,000,000 of emergency in 1934—the heaviest distribution being in October just before the fall elections—he now asks for $4,600,000,000 of 1935 emergency and $4,100,000,000 of 1936 emergency to tide through the 1936 campaign. It is fortunate for the Treasury debt and deficit that the next presidential election is not delayed until 1937, 1938, 1939, or 1940—or planned emergency might be extended indefinitely, until we had a government debt exceeding the combined debt of the 22 leading countries of Europe.

If the idea of the "brain trust" inventors of the N. R. A. was that a planned emergency would afford a pretext for evading the Constitution by delegating the legislative authority of Congress to the President, that idea may now be dispelled. The Supreme Court finds that "nothing has happened" that will vacate the Constitution and the legislative powers of Congress thereunder. What the Court doubtless means is that nothing has happened except politics, and that politics cannot lawfully erase the "constitutional processes of legislation which are an essential part of our system of government."

If the emergencies created in 1933 and 1934 do not afford a basis for a new-deal government outside of the Constitution, what is the use of planning further emergencies in 1935 and 1936? It is simply voting away $8,700,000,000 for advance emergencies that benefit nobody except the politicians who get them up. And when it is all over, the Supreme Court will keep on getting out decisions showing that nothing has happened except politics. It is not fair to the younger generation—the taxpayers of the future—who will carry millstones around their necks in paying for deficits and campaign bills contracted during the era of the playboys, called "brain trust."

The N. R. A. seems to be depended upon to create an industrial emergency by cracking down on legitimate industry, just as the A. A. A. is the planned method of producing agricultural emergency by plowing under the crops and killing the pigs. Repeal would be the logical remedy for both of these Federal prohibition plans.

Repeal the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., and thus remove two of the original causes of planned emergency, and we will not need the $4,600,000,000 emergency fund for 1935 and the $4,100,000,000 emergency fund for 1936; with a further yearly increase of the present unemployment army of 10,700,000, and a Federal dole and patronage army of 25,500,000. If we repeal the 670 prohibition codes of N. R. A. outright, and forthwith it may not be necessary for Congress to abdicate its legislative power over appropriations, which page 12 of the new Budget message describes as follows:

> I recommend that $4,000,000,000 be appropriated by the Congress in one sum, subject to allocation by the Executive * * *.

He should have added, to make it clear, to put in his own pocket to be used as his judgment dictates. Every vote the new deal secured at the last election cost the taxpayers of the country better than $200.

When the Executive is a candidate for reelection he will be the chief beneficiary of this $4,000,000,000 in one sum to be allocated by him. Will the Supreme Court deem that a constitutional reason for abdication of duty by Congress? If $250,000,000 had to be allocated to Maine in the off-year 1934, how much would Maine have to get for its emergency in a presidential compaign year—the allocator being the leading candidate? How many dollars of the taxpayers' money will be required for each new-deal vote?

When even Maine has declared against prohibition, why not give Maine the full benefits of repeal by repealing the N. R. A. codes which threaten Maine with emergency and allocation and dislocation in 1936?

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. HAYDEN), from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters in the State of Arkansas, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—ANNING S. PRALL

Mr. WAGNER. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I report back favorably the nomination of Anning S. Prall, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the unexpired term of 1 year from July 1, 1934, vice Hampson Gary.

I ask for the immediate confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Prall.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, we should not act on the matter at this time. The nomination should go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. WAGNER. May I remind the Senator from Michigan that in committee we had this nomination up for consideration this morning, and it was the view of the committee that I might ask for the immediate confirmation of Mr. Prall's nomination on the ground that there is now a vacancy on the Communications Commission. Mr. Prall is not now a member of the Commission. There is one vacancy on the Communications Commission, the vacancy being in the section of the Commission dealing with broadcasting; and it is very essential for the orderly conduct of the business of the Commission that this nomination be confirmed now, so that the place may be filled at once.

I remind the Senator also——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I was at the meeting of the committee, and I am sorry to say that I do not have such an understanding.

Mr. WAGNER. That was the understanding.

Mr. COUZENS. I did not join in that understanding. I understand the present situation with respect to the Communications Commission; but we had an understanding at the last session of Congress that nominations would not be brought up for confirmation without the Senate knowing that we were in executive session, and that nominations were coming up for confirmation. No injury can result from a delay of 1 day.

Mr. WAGNER. May I add another word to say that this is an exceptional case, and perhaps the Senator may change his attitude with respect to it. The name of Mr. Prall, who has been a Member of Congress for 14 years, was presented to the Senate at the last session to be a member of the Federal Radio Commission. The nomination went to the committee, was unanimously reported, came to the Senate, and was unanimously confirmed by the Senate. He did not take office because soon thereafter the communications bill was passed, creating a new Commission, and because he was then a Member of the House he was disqualified to be a member of the new Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to inquire, merely for information, whether there are a number of members of this Commission whose names have been presented to the Senate to come up ultimately for confirmation.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but may I point out a distinction? The other gentlemen whose names have been presented to the Senate are now members of the Commission, and any delay in the consideration of their nominations will not affect their status, because they will continue as members of the Commission. The place for which former Representative Prall has been nominated is now vacant. There is no member in charge of the broadcast section of the Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there any objection to the others who are named?

Mr. WAGNER. They are to be considered at a subsequent meeting of the committee, I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON. Have they not been considered at all as yet?

Mr. WAGNER. Not as yet; no.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to the Senator's request for the confirmation of the nomination; but there are some others on the Commission whose nominations I should like to see confirmed as well, and that is why I am asking the question.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I can understand the Senator's situation, and if former Representative Prall were now a member of the Commission I should not ask for his immediate confirmation. There is a vacancy existing there now, however, and I am asking the immediate confirmation of Mr. Prall simply in order that the Commission may proceed with its business.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York—and I have no doubt he has the point in mind—that the legislation which was passed during the last session of Congress required the Commission to examine into various matters of importance in the communications field and to report thereon to the Congress. I assume it is important in the extreme that when those reports come here they shall have had consideration by a full Commission rather than a partial Commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the powers and authority of this Commission have been so greatly enlarged, I should like to ask some member of the committee whether there should not be the greatest care in ascertaining the qualifications of those recommended to be commissioners; whether we should not obtain the very best men for those positions, because it was assumed that with the expansion of its authority this Commission had risen to a position of greater importance than that which it had occupied in the past. Speaking for myself, I want very competent men on the Commission.

Mr. WHITE. I think we all do. I assume that Mr. Prall's name and qualifications have had the most earnest consideration of the Executive. I think the New York Senators know him and know his qualifications; and I may add, for whatever it may be worth, that, having sat in the House a number of years with him, I share the high opinion that the New York Senators have of him. It does seem to me important, however, in view of the requests for recommendations which Congress has made of the Commission, that the recommendations should come from the full Commission, if it is possible to have a full Commission; and it is largely for that reason that I was ready to acquiesce in the suggestion that the name be reported now, and that it be immediately acted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the nomination?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan objects.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I have no objection to Mr. Prall; in fact, I heartily approve of his appointment. From all the information I have received, his qualifications are of the highest. If, however, nominations are to be reported to the Senate and immediately acted upon without ever going to the calendar, we shall establish a precedent which will cause us much trouble. I know we have opposed heretofore such action as is now proposed; and I am opposing the immediate consideration of this nomination as a matter of rule and precedent rather than because of any objections I have to Mr. Prall or any desire to interfere with the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I appreciate the attitude of the Senator from Michigan; and I shall ask for early consideration of the Executive Calendar tomorrow or the day after.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in view of the statement which has been made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] I desire to state that when these names came to the Committee on Interstate Commerce the other day I did what I am asking to have done in each such case. I asked that the names be referred first to the Senators from the State from which the nominee has been appointed, asking the Senators to give their views with reference to the particular man nominated.

I agree with the Senator from Utah that by reason of the fact that the Communications Commission today deals not only with telephone communication but with radio and all other forms of communication it really is one of the most important commissions we have; and as chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce I am particularly anxious that we shall carefully search the record of each man appointed upon the Commission.

I also desire to call attention to the fact that under the former law the country was divided into five different zones, and it was required under the law that a commissioner represent each of those zones. There is no such provision in the present law, and as a result thereof we find what? We find on the Commission three men coming from the first zone, but no Commissioner representing the entire section of the country west of the Ohio clear to the Pacific Ocean. It seems to me that one man should be appointed from each of the five zones who knows the condition in that particular section of the country; and with respect to this and other Commissions I hope that in the future we shall not have sent down to us the names of two or three men representing one particular section of the country, leaving other sections unrepresented.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the statement which the Senator from Montana has just made, and which I heartily approve, I invite his attention to the fact that one of the most important governmental commissions today is the so-called "Securities Commission." Heretofore, and at present, as I understand, substantially all the members of that Commission are from a limited area of the United States—largely that embracing New England and New York and Pennsylvania. Certainly securities are issued, or should be issued, in the West. The entire western part of the United States has no representative at all on the Securities Commission. While I am not sectional by any means, I do think that in the distribution of important offices, whose functions affect the entire country, men should be selected from various parts of the United States. I hope the Senator will join with me in trying to find someone west of the Mississippi River who is competent to act upon the Securities Commission.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one other question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. It is a fact, is it not, that on two occasions at the last session of Congress and again today the Committee on Interstate Commerce has inquired into the qualifications of Mr. Prall and unanimously determined that, from the standpoint of high character and capacity, he is eminently qualified for this position?

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is correct.

THE WORLD COURT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the Executive Calendar.

Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, transmitted to the Senate December 10, 1930, and reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations on the 10th instant, with reservations, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the protocols and the resolution of adherence. It is my intention to address the Senate tomorrow on the subject matter of the resolution and the protocols, and I shall, therefore, at the proper time, move a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock, but I ask that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the protocols.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, thereupon proceeded to consider the protocols, which were read the second time.

The protocols were reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now offer the resolution of adherence, with the reservations reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of adherence will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the said three protocols, the one of date December 16, 1920, and the other two each of date September 14, 1929 (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction), with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of adherence to the protocols.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before making the motion I have in mind——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the protocols will he permit me to offer an amendment to the resolution of adherence so that technically it may be the pending question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer an amendment to the resolution of adherence and ask that it may be the pending question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to the resolution of adherence.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Michigan if the reservation he has offered is the one relating to national policy?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is the reservation which has been attached every time the Senate has been asked heretofore to act upon this proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the resolution will be printed and will be available.

The amendment submitted by Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence was ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the said protocols and statute hereby approved shall not be so construed as to require the United States to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall adherence to the said protocol and statute be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless there is further executive business, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 15, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Shepherd Divine, we rejoice that in Thee there is a perfect blending of majesty with humility, of strength with gentleness, of passion with repose, and of holiness with sinful, suffering men. When we yield to the waves of memory, when things are too deep to be revealed to mortal man, when the stains of living make us unworthy, do Thou glow out of the shadows and sharpen the vision of our inward eyes. Minister unto us and keep us this day in accord with Thy holy will. Heavenly Father of mercy, we wait; a herald has sounded at our door and a distinguished Member has left us. Let morning hope from the realms of a new day break through upon the loved ones in this hour of the translation of their honored one. Oh lighten and transfigure their sorrow like rain clouds in a summer sun and Thine shall be the glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 11, 1935, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object, because I think this is a perfectly reasonable request under the circumstances—I should like to make the general request of the majority leader that we be given as much advance information as possible relative to the program of the majority. We expect there will be some very important legislation coming before the House during the next few weeks. This side of the House is very anxious to get as much advance information relative to the program of the majority as it is consistent to give us. As we all know, during the last session, under the emergency plea, a great many important measures were considered in a very short time. Some of them were given very limited hearings before the committees, and at least one or two of the measures were not even in print when they were passed upon by the House. It seems to me this emergency season must be practically over now, and we respectfully request the majority to give us a program of the business for each week in advance and, as far as possible, to give us notice of when the most important matters are going to be called up in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I make this request in all sincerity, and I hope the majority leader will give us as much consideration as he can under the circumstances.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the request of the minority leader is a very reasonable one. He understands, of course, that I am acting as majority leader only temporarily during the illness of Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that; but as long as the gentleman occupies that position he must take the responsibility.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir; and I will do so, and shall be very glad, as far as I can, to communicate these important official matters to the minority leader as soon as I learn them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement and to extend an invitation to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is a great day in Pennsylvania. For the first time in almost half a century we have elected a Governor in Pennsylvania under the banner of the Democratic Party. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, this fine gentleman whom we have elected chief executive of our great State was not elected by Democrats only but was elected by a group of fine men and women of all political faiths. Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, the Representatives from Pennsylvania are going to Harrisburg, to the capitol, to witness the inauguration of this Governor. By authority given to me by the caucus of the Pennsylvania Representatives on this side of the aisle, I extend an invitation to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Members of this House, to go with us tomorrow morning, leaving the Pennsylvania Station at 8 o'clock on a special train provided for us, and returning tomorrow evening, to arrive in the city between 7 and 8 o'clock. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that all the Members of the House will honor Pennsylvania by their presence at the inaugural ceremony. Thank you. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Civil Service:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by the act of Congress to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States, approved January 16, 1883, I transmit herewith the Fifty-first Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1935.

LAWS AND RESOLUTIONS OF PUERTO RICO

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith certified copies of laws and resolutions enacted by the Thirteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico during its second regular session, February 12 to April 15, 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1935.

ORDINANCES OF PUERTO RICO

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 38 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith certified copies of each of four ordinances adopted by the Public Service Commission of Puerto Rico. The ordinances are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Interior forwarding them to me.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1935.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WEAVER, for 4 days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. MORAN, until Thursday, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOYLAN, for 3 days, on account of death in family.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be a great day in the State of New Jersey. For the first time in 27 years we have elected a Republican Governor in an off year. [Applause.] We reelected our entire Republican delegation, showing that the good people of the State of New Jersey still retain their sanity and intelligence. [Applause.] We elected a Republican State senate and a Republican State house of assembly. [Applause.] We were unfortunate to lose our distinguished Senator, but what does a mere Senator or two amount to anyway? [Laughter.]

Tomorrow we inaugurate the Honorable Harold Hoffman as Governor of New Jersey, a man of destiny, a former Member of this House, and destined to go very far, especially when the country resumes its sanity. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I invite all of the Members of the Democratic Party, at their own expense, to come to Trenton tomorrow and join with us in this love feast and refresh their souls by seeing in the inauguration of our able young Governor one possibility of the salvation of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, as the Members know, being on this side, I am a good Republican, but may I say that I succeeded a very splendid gentleman who sat on the other side of the House. Today Gen. Charles H. Martin is being inaugurated as Governor of the great State of Oregon. [Applause.] I ask unanimous consent to have a telegram of congratulation sent to him from this body, because he is a real gentleman, a distinguished soldier, a true American citizen, and I am sure will make a very splendid Governor of the great Commonwealth of Oregon. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, may I announce, too, that this is also a great day out there in Kansas. We are today inaugurating Governor Landon, a Republican. We have a Republican legislature and a Republican majority of the delegation in Congress from that conservative old State of Kansas, which does not envy such a radical State as Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, we do not have to wait in Ohio until tomorrow or Wednesday to celebrate a Democratic victory. It is a great day in Ohio today. We are inaugurating a former Member of the House of Representatives and a progressive Democrat as the next Governor of Ohio, the Honorable Martin L. Davey. I am glad to state to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that only thrice during the past 29 years have we inaugurated Republican Governors, and each time those distinguished gentlemen were one termers. So it is a pleasure to make this announcement today, and I assure you in advance that the former Member of this distinguished body will make such a fine record in the State of Ohio that he will be reelected in 1936 for a second term. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the great State of Oklahoma is now represented in both Houses of Congress by a solid Democratic delegation. [Applause.] Today in Oklahoma we are inaugurating the Honorable E. W. Marland as Governor of our State. He was one of our distinguished colleagues who sat on the Democratic side of the aisle during the Seventy-third Congress, and who was elected Governor of our State on a program of "Bring the 'new deal' to Oklahoma." No man in this Nation is more eminently fitted or better qualified than the Honorable E. W. Marland to serve his State, and it is with pleasure and with a feeling of pride that I announce that today he becomes the tenth Democratic Governor of our State. Oklahoma always has had and as long as our party endures always will have a Democratic Governor. [Applause.]

Mr. CARMICHAEL. Mr. Speaker, some of the Members will probably remember that the stars fell on Alabama in 1833. The stars again fell on Alabama at the Rose Bowl out in Pasadena just a few days ago. [Applause.] The stars will fall on Alabama today when Bib Graves, a former Governor of Alabama, will be again inaugurated as Governor of the State of Alabama. [Applause.]

PATMAN-HOBART DEBATE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech I made in a radio debate Saturday night and also to include my opponent's address and the rejoinder, with certain extracts and statements in explanation thereof, including an extension of my own remarks.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, who was the opponent?

Mr. PATMAN. He is the national commander of the American Veterans' Association in New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. There was a radio debate over the National Broadcasting Co.'s hook-up Saturday evening, January 12, between 7 and 8 o'clock, eastern standard time. The subject for debate was, "Resolved, that H. R. 1 should be enacted into law." I had the affirmative side of the question and Mr. Donald A. Hobart, national commander of the American Veterans' Association, had the negative side. The time was divided 20 minutes to me to open the debate, 30 minutes to Mr. Hobart, and 10 minutes for my rejoinder. Dr. John T. Madden, dean of the school of commerce of the New York University, presided. Mr. Hobart challenged me to debate with him on this subject.

My opening speech was as follows:

THE QUESTION

The question of which I have the affirmative side of in this debate is "Resolved, that H. R. 1 should be enacted into a law." I am the author of this bill, and it provides that veterans may deposit their adjusted-service certificates, payable January 1, 1945, and receive United States notes, or "new money", in return for the balance due, after deducting prior loans and interest before October 1, 1931, but no interest after that time.

"BONUS" A MISNOMER

The word "bonus" is a misnomer, was coined by the enemies of the veterans, and should never be used. Adjusted-service certificates were delivered to veterans in return for services rendered at a very low rate of pay.

JUST CAUSE

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hobart, ladies and gentlemen present and of the radio audience, armed with a cause that I believe is just and right, I am glad of this opportunity to give to the people our side of this important question. If we do not have the right side of the question, we are not entitled to win. However, I am convinced if you get all the facts the verdict will be in our favor.

SOLDIERS' PAY VERSUS CIVILIAN PAY

April 6, 1917, war was declared by this country against Germany. Congress immediately commenced consideration of a bill that had for its purpose raising an army. Little consideration was given to the question of pay that men in uniform would receive. It was well known that if any injustice should be done in this regard it could be corrected later. Between four and five million men were caused to don the uniform of their country. Practically all of these men felt it was their duty, desired to be patriotic, and, like all good soldiers, served wherever they were called upon to serve. Nevertheless, it was admitted that practically all of them suffered a serious economic disability by being required to serve at $1 a day, when others, for various reasons exempted from military service, were making, in the words of our own great President, from $8 to $20 a day in the shipyards and munition factories.

DEDUCTIONS GOT THE $30 A MONTH

Do not get the impression that the private soldier actually received $30 a month, as reported. The average allotment of his pay for his dependents, if he had dependents, was about $15 a month. He was required to carry war-risk insurance, which cost him on an average of $6.60 a month, the Government thereby requiring him to make his monthly contribution for the protection of the loved ones of his dead buddies. Four million veterans paid Uncle Sam approximately $400,000,000 in this way for which they did not receive one penny in return.

Uncle Sam paid for the insurance on his ships but not on his men. The soldier was required to pay for altering and mending his clothing and shoes, his barber bills, laundry bills, and bills at canteens for tobacco and incidentals. If he had anything left, he subscribed for a Liberty bond on the installment plan or he was called a "slacker."

Commissioner O'Reilly, who is now an alderman in a western city, at the end of his first month in the service, after waiting 2 hours in line with his company, approached the paymaster's table, saluted, and gave his name, he told Mr. James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The paymaster, looking at the company pay roll, replied, "Private O'Reilly, you owe this Government 80 cents."

OTHERS RECEIVED ADJUSTED PAY

When the war was over those who dealt with property rights had their pay adjusted by the Congress of the United States. Seven thousand World War "cost-plus" contractors—many of them had engaged in a "war for profits"—had their pay adjusted. Included in this group were the Du Ponts, who recently admitted that they made a profit of a quarter of a billion dollars out of the war after paying all expenses and taxes on what they billed to South American countries as "sporting goods." The railroad owners and war contractors received an adjustment of pay in cash and other benefits amounting to billions of dollars. They asked the Government for a revision of their contracts and were not called unpatriotic for doing it, and they were paid in cash.

Five hundred thousand Federal employees of the Government, who received up to $2,500 a year during the war, received an adjustment of pay amounting to $1,440 each—they asked for a revision of their contracts and they were paid in cash $240 a year for 6 years.

Foreign countries asked for a revision of their contracts and had their debts adjusted, which resulted in Congress giving to them as an outright gift the huge sum of $10,000,000,000. Many of these countries used our money to pay their own soldiers adjusted pay and bonuses up to the enormous sum of $7,290 each.

CONSCIENCE-STRICKEN CONGRESS

After doing so much for property rights and foreign countries, a conscience-stricken Congress was determined to make some adjustment of pay received by the men who wore the uniform. The cost of the war was $36,000,000,000; the men in uniform received $4,500,000,000. It was agreed that the Members of Congress could not save their faces and allow less than $1 a day as adjusted pay.

SECRET CAUCUS AND CHISELING AMENDMENTS

The Ways and Means Committee of the House consisted of 15 Republicans and 10 Democrats. The Republicans put the Democrats out of the committee room, closed the door, called in representatives from the War Department, and outlined the plan of paying $1 a day to each veteran for home service and $1.25 a day for service overseas. These representatives were instructed to suggest how deductions and reductions could be made, to propose every chiseling amendment for which any argument could be offered for its adoption, and to get up some sort of a plan that would appear to the veterans that they were actually getting the $1 a day, but which, in fact, would be so manipulated that they would get just as little of it as possible. One of the unfairest chiseling amendments was the deduction of the first $60. Another was to provide a way whereby the banks would consume one-half of each certificate through compound interest after a few loans, obtained in dribs, had been made.

In this secret caucus, where words were spoken that were supposed to never be known, the plan was conceived which was enacted to give the veteran a post-dated check, an I O U, or a "tombstone" certificate, payable in 1945. The basis for it was the $1 a day for domestic service and $1.25 for service overseas, plus interest at 4 percent and plus 25 percent of the basic pay for waiting from 1925 until 1945. The veterans were not asked to take or reject these certificates. They had to take them or leave them alone, just like they were compelled to go in the service, whether they wanted to or not.

CERTIFICATE HOLDERS AND REMAINDER DUE

Three and one-half million veterans hold certificates, averaging $1,000; three million of them have borrowed the limit allowed by law, which is 50 percent of each certificate, and after deducting prior loans and interest before October 6, 1931, there is a remainder due of $2,000,000,000. They are paying $163,000 a day in compound interest on these loans to the Government and to the banks, which is rapidly consuming the balance due.

HIGH INTEREST AND TIME DUE

They have paid as high as 6-percent and 8-percent interest, compounded annually, for their own money. If the Government should now allow the veterans the highest interest rate the veterans were charged, an amount equal to the face value of each certificate was due long before 1931. If the certificates remain as they are, the average veteran who has a $1,000 certificate will receive the small sum of $68.50 in 1945. Compound interest paid to the banks and to the Government on a few small loans obtained in dribs will have eaten up the remainder.

If Congress grants a revision of the contract, as requested in H. R. 1, and these certificates are dated back to the time the services were rendered, and there is an adjustment of interest so as to give the veteran the same rate of interest, and no more, that was paid to war contractors, railroad owners, and all others on contracts growing out of the World War, and is given only the earned part of the 25-percent increase that Congress admitted was due for waiting 20 years and not deduct the first $60, each veteran is entitled at this time to a substantial sum more than the face value of his certificate. If the Government will allow the veteran the earned part of the 25 percent for waiting, along with the $1 and $1.25 a day, together with a rate of interest less than the Government has charged veterans, 6 percent compounded annually, an amount equal to the full face value of each certificate was due October 1, 1931.

PAST DUE ANY WAY IT IS COMPUTED

There is no fair way to compute the amount due a veteran, using the $1 and $1.25 a day as a basis, without determining that each veteran was entitled to an amount equal to the full face value of his certificate on or before October 1, 1931.

If the veterans receive credit for a fair adjustment of interest, and the certificates are dated back to 1918, they have borrowed the equivalent of the accumulated interest—the principal remains intact.

We are not trying to change the amount of $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day for service overseas, representing the basic pay of $1,400,000,000, that Congress acknowledged. We want it paid as of the time the services were rendered.

VETERANS FIGURED OUT OF 7 YEARS' INTEREST

Mr. Andrew Mellon, with his short pencil in the middle of the night, aided by a secret committee meeting, figured the veterans out of 7 years' interest. This omission appears to have been deliberate, since title 5, section 501, of the act provides that in no case shall a veteran receive interest before January 1, 1925. He also persuaded the committee to deduct the first $60, and then got the bill passed through the House under a gag rule that did not permit an amendment to cross a "t" and dot an "i."

CRIES OF DEFICITS AND TAX REDUCTIONS

The acknowledgment of this debt was delayed several years by cries of deficits and tax reductions, which were not heard when billions were being voted for adjusted pay to others.

The Secretary of the Treasury, when the bill was before Congress, predicted a great deficit at the end of the next fiscal year. He made a billion-dollar error in his prediction, but the discovery, months later, was too late—as intended—for the "tombstone" certificate bill had already become a law.

REFUNDS ON INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

Income-tax payers received approximately $3,000,000,000 in adjustments on their income-tax payments made during and by reason of the war. Secretary Andrew Mellon made huge refunds to citizen Andrew Mellon and to citizen Andrew Mellon companies. When a payment was made on such a refund, 6-percent interest was allowed by him from 1918, or the time of the alleged overpayment. He did not forget his own interest over the same period of time he deprived the veteran of interest on a confessed debt.

Suppose holders of Government bonds should discover they paid money for bonds in 1918 and that they were not drawing interest until 1925, one of such bondholders would make more noise than a thousand veterans are now making over a similar loss.

VETERAN RECEIVED $1; MUST PAY HIS PART OF $21

Veteran A entered the service during the war and received $1 a day. Civilian B went to the shipyards and received $20 a day. The Government borrowed $21 a day to pay the pair. When the war was over, these debts must be paid. Veteran A, although he received only one of the $21, must pay his part of the entire $21. With the adjusted pay the veteran receives about 20 percent or less of what civilians received. If a veteran should receive more than a civilian, the excess could properly be termed a bonus, or pay for patriotism, but such is not the case.

A few companies made as much in net profits during the war as we are asking now to be paid on a confessed debt to three and one-half million men.

WILL GAG-RULE TACTICS BE ENDORSED?

One question is: Shall this debt be paid as the Government paid all other debts, or will the many wrongs that were perpetrated through star-chamber proceedings and gag-rule tactics in the enactment of the legislation remain?

WHERE WILL WE GET THE MONEY?

The next question is: How will the payment be made according to H. R. 1? Each certificate is an obligation of the Government.

We propose under H. R. 1 to permit a veteran to deposit his Government obligation and receive new money in United States notes in return for the remainder due. We are asking that one form of Government obligation be converted into another form of Government obligation, which will not create a new debt. We are merely asking that the veterans be allowed to do the same thing in the same way that banks are now permitted to do and get the same kind of money.

$8,000,000,000 IN GOLD IN TREASURY

I hold in my hand an official daily statement of the United States Treasury. It is compiled from the latest proved reports from Treasury offices and depositaries. It is dated January 8, 1935. Under the heading of current assets and liabilities there is listed in the form of an asset, gold, $8,254,742,280.21. This gold belongs to the United States Government. We have five and one-half billion dollars of actual money in circulation. We can set aside and earmark five and one-half billion dollars in gold to redeem all outstanding money 100 percent. We can then set aside and earmark $2,000,000,000 in gold to redeem 100 percent the currency issued to pay the veterans under my bill. We will then have one-half billion dollars in untouched and idle gold in the United States Treasury. This does not include the enormous silver reserve of $720,000,000.

LARGE AMOUNT OF MONEY MAY BE SAFELY ISSUED

Eight billion dollars in gold is sufficient to authorize the Government to issue $20,000,000,000 in currency on a 40-percent gold-reserve basis. Since we have outstanding only five and one-half billions in money and we propose to issue under my bill $2,000,000,000, the Government can still safely issue an additional sum if necessary, amounting to more than $12,000,000,000. On the devaluation of the gold dollar the Government made $2,800,000,000 clear profit.

SUFFICIENT RESERVE SHOULD BE ADMITTED

In view of the indisputable fact, which is shown from the official report of the United States Treasury that we have sufficient gold to back all currency now outstanding and the currency we propose to issue under this bill 100 percent in gold and still have a surplus, I believe, in fairness, my honorable opponent will concede that the money to be issued under the terms of my bill will be in all respects sound under the most strict definition of the gold standard.

MORE GOLD BEHIND IT THAN BANKERS' MONEY

The most enthusiastic advocate of the gold standard and the most reactionary banker cannot question the soundness of this money, which will have 60 percent more gold behind it than any Federal Reserve note or other bankers' money ever had.

EAT THEIR CAKE AND KEEP IT, TOO

We have 12 Federal Reserve banks in this Nation. Each of these banks has an official that is authorized by the United States Government to cause to be printed and delivered to it new money, paper currency, produced by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. In order to get this money the bank deposits with itself a Government obligation, which may be payable January 1, 1945, or any other date, as collateral security for the issuance of the money. While the bank uses the money, it continues to get interest on the bonds. It pays on the average of 27 cents a thousand dollars for the cost of printing the money. They use the credit of the Nation free. They eat their cake and keep it, too. Approximately three and one-half billion dollars have been issued to Federal Reserve banks in this way.

It is possible for the Government, under our plan, to pay the veterans $2,000,000,000 and not have one dollar extra circulating money, by merely withdrawing two billion in Federal Reserve notes, upon which the people are paying interest every day they are outstanding, and substitute therefor the two billion in United States notes we propose to issue and upon which no one will be paying interest while they are outstanding. This will take an annual bonus away from the Federal Reserve banks, which they do not need and are not entitled to.

EAT THEIR CAKE AND KEEP MORE CAKE THAN THEY HAVE EATEN

National banks of the country have deposited approximately a billion dollars in United States Government bonds, many of them payable January 1, 1945, and have received approximately a billion dollars in new money in return. Each of these banks can use that money as a reserve and lend $10 in credit on every one of these dollars that it has in its vaults or with the Reserve bank. These national banks continue to get interest on the bonds while they are using the money. They eat their cake and keep more cake than they have eaten.

IF RIGHT FOR BANKS, RIGHT FOR VETERANS

No person can possibly give a logical reason why it is not right for a veteran to deposit his Government obligation, which is payable January 1, 1945, and receive new money in return for it, and at the same time contend that it is fair and right for banks to deposit Government obligations payable January 1, 1945, and receive new money in return for them. If it is right for the banks, it is right for the veterans. If the money issued to the banks is good money—and it is—the money issued to the veterans will be good money.

There is more justification for issuing the money in return for the certificates, since the banks are paid a bonus to put money into circulation, which fee will not have to be paid to the veterans under the plan proposed. The veterans were not paid in 1924 because it was claimed that the country was not able to stand the payment. Conditions have changed since then, as the country now has several times as much gold as is necessary to pay this debt, if a gold backing is desired for the money issued for that purpose.

HOW INFLATION MAY BE PREVENTED

It has been said that there is danger of inflation after this money is paid. According to H. R. 1 the Secretary of the Treasury cannot withdraw any of the money we propose to issue, as we expect it to remain in permanent circulation, for no one will be paying interest on this money while it is outstanding, but the Secretary of the Treasury can retire sufficient money issued to Federal Reserve and national banks to prevent inflation. Therefore, it cannot be said that there will be danger of unbridled inflation under our plan.

AMERICAN VETERANS' ASSOCIATION

Members of the American Veterans' Association are entitled to their opinions. I do not impute to them ulterior motives. Nor do I impugn the sincere motives of any person who believes that these certificates should not be paid now.

Many people have asked me why a veterans' organization is opposing this bill. My information is that the American Veterans' Association has spent a considerable sum of money within the last 2 years carrying full-page advertisements in the daily newspapers of the Nation. Since the organization advertises that only money obtained through loans on certificates is used for this purpose, the members of this association must be in very affluent circumstances to contribute from $500 to $800 each.

It is my understanding that when the organization commenced to function, every member of the committee, of about 100 veterans, pledged all they could borrow on their certificates to carry on their fight against the other veterans in their efforts to get these certificates paid. Considering the small membership of the American Veterans' Association, which is about one-fifth of 1 percent of the veterans, and the enormous sum of money, obtained by the members on their certificates, that has been pooled and spent for advertising, the logical conclusion is that practically all the members are in a class that does not represent the sentiment of 1 percent of the veterans of the Nation. This sentiment, however, is well expressed by the two major organizations of veterans, the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, who favor this payment.

SUMMARY

May we remember that it will require $2,000,000,000 to pay the balance due, that it will go into the homes of 3,500,000 veterans in every community in the Nation. The veterans in the five counties in New York City will receive a remainder of $121,000,000. It will go to every race, color, and creed; to those engaged in every avocation, trade, and business and to the unemployed. It will not cause the adoption of any new principle for the issuance of money. It will prevent the veteran from losing the remaining half of his certificate through the adopted compound-interest racket.

HAVE MADE A CASE

In conclusion, I believe that any fair-minded listener will agree: First, that I have shown that, although the adjusted-service certificates are payable in 1945, each veteran who holds one is now entitled to an amount equal to the face value of that certificate; second, that the amount due can be paid with sound currency; third, that such payment will not increase taxes or create an additional debt; fourth, that such payment will be a godsend to this country, because it will quickly distribute purchasing power evenly and uniformly into every nook and corner of this Nation; and, fifth, that it is in the interest of the nonveteran as well as the veteran that this payment be made now.

We are expecting a hearing on this bill before the Ways and Means Committee of the House in a very few days, and we are hopeful that it will become a law.

Text of speech of Donald A. Hobart, national commander of the American Veterans' Association:

Mr. Chairman, Congressman PATMAN, and members of the radio audience, Congressman PATMAN has distinguished himself in recent years by zeal and persistency in behalf of veterans' legislation. He has made the veterans of the World War his special charge. He has ever been ready to defend and advance what he conceives to be their rights and privileges.

This concentration upon his objective and this continued solicitude may serve to explain what I believe to be his honest error of exaggerating the benefits to be derived from the immediate prepayment of the soldiers' bonus, which under the terms of the contract is not due before 1945, and in ignoring or minimizing the effect of such prepayment upon all citizens and upon the national welfare.

As the spokesman for the American Veterans' Association, a national patriotic organization composed exclusively of veterans, I declare that our association bases its position on the fundamental principle that there exists a reciprocal obligation between citizen and state and state and citizen.

Within the last few weeks the United States Supreme Court, in a unanimous opinion, has confirmed his principle of the American Veterans' Association in the following language:

"Government, Federal and State, each in its own sphere, owes a duty to the people within its jurisdiction to preserve itself in adequate strength to maintain peace and order and to assure the just enforcement of law. And every citizen owes the reciprocal duty, according to his capacity, to support and defend Government against all enemies."

My first argument against the prepayment of the 1945 soldier bonus is that it is unfair to the veteran. More than unfair, it is cruel in its effect upon the unemployed veteran on public relief—the one for whom the Nation should have the greatest sympathy.

President Roosevelt wants to give jobs to three and a half million employable wage earners who are in need and who are now living on relief funds. Does anyone believe for a moment that the unemployed veteran would prefer to continue in idleness? Does anyone think that veterans on relief would not rather have work? Will this veteran who wants a job regard as his loyal friend any individual who creates a situation whereby he is forced to continue in idleness and is unable to qualify for one of the three and a half million jobs which are to be provided, and meanwhile finance his relief at the ultimate expense of his family?

The veteran who is in receipt of a sum as high as $750 cannot claim and cannot prove his destitution. Therefore I believe that it would be heartless to make the payment available to veterans now and create a situation where the unemployed veteran must continue without work until his savings are exhausted.

The veterans' certificates are, in fact, paid-up endowment insurance policies. As President Roosevelt wrote in his recent letter, the equity in the insurance policy in some cases is the only resource which the veteran's family has. It is not evidence of a nation's gratitude or thoughtfulness to say to the neediest veteran, "All right, soldier, go ahead and give up this little protection you now have for your family. Spend the money, and then when you are completely destitute we will hope that some of the Public Works jobs will still be open for you." Is this kindness? Is this what the unemployed veteran wants?

Nevertheless, this will be the situation which will exist if the veterans' bonus is paid.

In addition to being unfair to those veterans who merit our greatest sympathy, the prepayment of the soldiers' bonus of 1945 is unfair to the citizens.

The proposal is simply this: To hand out $2,000,000,000 to 3 percent of the citizens of the country. And is this money to go to the needy, the people you are most willing to help? Oh, no; it is to go to every kind of person; the bonus will be paid to the rich as well as the poor and to those who have suffered no unemployment and no distress.

There has been evidence submitted that those who must pay are actually financially less able than those who are to receive.

The official publication of the American Legion has unequivocally asserted that the average member of the American Legion has an income twice that of the general average income. In further proof of the buying power of its members, it was declared that 94 percent of the legionnaires carry insurance policies averaging over $12,000. And please remember that the American Legion has always contended that its members are truly representative of all the soldiers who served in the World War.

In the face of these assertions by these veterans of their fortunate economic status, could anything be more calculatingly unjust than the proposal which is before the country today? It means, in effect, that a veteran with an income of $50 a week says to his civilian neighbor, with an income of only $25 a week: "Pay me now what you promised to pay 10 to 20 years hence", and then, has the temerity to add, "It will be a good thing for both of us."

The prepayment of the soldiers' bonus is unfair to all citizens because of the burden of taxes and deficits which now rests on the shoulders of everyone.

The national debt stands at $28,000,000,000 now. The accumulated deficit from 1931 to the end of the fiscal year of 1936 will be more than $20,000,000,000. Every gainfully employed person in the United States is carrying on his back a combined national and local governmental debt of approximately $1,155. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, the total debt will increase $16,123,901 every 24 hours. During this brief debate the total national debt will have increased $671,829, or $2,015,487 every hour of an 8-hour working day. And it is at this time, in a country which has already spent more than $7,000,000,000 on behalf of its World War veterans and their dependents, and when 1 out of every 6 families in the country is receiving public relief, that the demand for an additional $2,000,000,000 due in the years 1945 to 1955 is made.

If this be justice, then the citizens must plead for mercy.

I submit that it is in the interest of national recovery, in the interest of all veterans and all citizens, to uphold and strengthen as best we can our national credit, as President Roosevelt said before the American Legion convention in Chicago in October 1933. I submit that we should not now take the risk of weakening that credit by demanding the prepayment of a $2,000,000,000 obligation, none of which is due before 1945. I submit that it is not good sense to see how close we can come to the precipice; to see how many straws we dare place on the camel's back.

The American Veterans' Association is opposed to the prepayment of the soldiers' bonus now because we believe the economic advantages claimed for the payment are entirely false, illusory, and unsound. It is nothing more or less than a proposal that three and one-half million veterans should be urged to get immediate cash on an insurance policy, not yet due, and spend it.

If that makes sense, why should not every citizen of the United States be urged—indeed why should not the United States Government help him—to cash his own private insurance policies and spend the proceeds? There is more than $100,000,000,000 insurance in force in the United States, written in the names of some sixty or seventy million citizens. If it is a good and desirable thing for a limited number of persons to cash in their insurance, why is not it a good thing for everybody? And why should not all the 94 percent of the American Legion members cash in their $12,000-average-insurance policies.

Congressman PATMAN is probably thinking that I have missed the entire point of his argument. The particular method which he has devised for the payment of the soldiers' certificates is such, he contends, that it will completely avoid all the pitfalls which I have pointed out.

Congressman PATMAN's bill proposes that the Government shall issue $2,000,000,000 worth of non-interest-bearing notes which shall be declared legal tender by law, and that all veterans shall receive this money in return for their bonus certificates. Just as simple as that! No increase in taxes. No bond issue. No delay. No graft or favoritism. No additional interest payments on the part of the Government; and, in addition, the Federal Government, in the process, will save about $1,000,000,000 over the next 10 years.

Congressman PATMAN, I know, has never made any representation that he is an authority on money. Heaven knows I cannot qualify in that respect, either, but in common with the average citizen who thoughtfully reflects upon this proposal it is only natural that some common or garden variety of questions should suggest themselves.

If the United States Government can honestly pay off a debt of $2,000,000,000 without any bond issues and without any increased taxes, either now or in the future, what in the world is to prevent this Nation, or any nation, from paying off its entire debt in the same way? Why should there ever again be any taxes levied upon our citizens in the future? Can it be that the whole civilized world has been in financial darkness since money was first known? Can it be that every President of the United States, from Washington to Roosevelt, and every Secretary of the Treasury, from Alexander Hamilton to Henry Morgenthau, Jr., has been an ignorant fumbler?

President Roosevelt has had authority to issue $3,000,000,000 worth of non-interest-bearing notes for many months and has not done so. Does Congressman PATMAN believe he has been criminally derelict in holding back recovery by this refusal? The bluntest statement which can be made is that Congressman PATMAN's non-interest-bearing notes are nothing but "paper" money. The most considerate and kindly judgment that can be given, in my opinion, is that at best it is experimental currency.

Our soldiers who served in the army of occupation in Germany during the "paper inflation" will know why they do not wish to be paid in that kind of money.

We can give credit to Congressman PATMAN for his good intentions in setting up what he believes to be adequate safeguards against uncontrolled expansion, and there our approval must end. For it has been a common delusion of all statesmen and all nations that they could control currency expansions; and despite this, all nations which have started on such a toboggan ride have rarely been able to stop quarter or half way down the slide but have been forced to go the whole bitter way.

Is it fair to the veterans to ask them alone to bear the burden of this experimental currency? If something goes wrong—and as a nation I believe we are entitled to more assurances than the opinion of one Congressman that these dollars will always be worth 100 cents—it is not fair that the veteran should receive the brunt of criticism. For public sentiment might easily arise against the veterans and say: "You and your demand for a bonus have brought this evil thing upon us. It was your willingness to take this experimental money and to spend it which has brought disaster on us all."

If we must in the future resort to such an experiment in our monetary system, it is only fair that all the citizens should bear the risk evenly, so that no section of our population can ever be held exclusively responsible.

On a previous occasion, Congressman PATMAN has said concerning his bill, "It is my desire to help the country by the distribution of purchasing power that is very much needed at this time. Money is the blood of the body politic. There is no better way of giving the Nation a much-needed blood transfusion than by the injection of new money into the veins of business"

I should like for a moment to adopt this medical figure of speech and give a little additional consideration to it. We are all familiar with the value of a blood transfusion, and we also know something about the care with which the operation is safeguarded. We know that a most rigid examination is made of the type of blood which is to be transfused. Even Congressman PATMAN, I suggest, were he on the operating table, would want to be certain that he was getting the right type of blood. He would be far from satisfied with something that looked like blood, but which might be red ink, pink lemonade, or colored water.

If Congressman PATMAN has the same regard for himself which many war veterans have for his continued good health, he would want to be positive of these things. He would also wish to know for a certainty that the doctors who were performing the operation were skillful men; that they were not practicing on him, or merely trying an experiment. These would only be sensible precautions, and no one would accuse Congressman PATMAN of being unduly cautious were he to insist on them.

In a precisely similar way, if this currency transfusion of non-interest-bearing notes is to take place, if it is so completely foolproof and so devoid of all hazard, it must be that it has been approved by some experts besides Mr. PATMAN.

We have a right to inquire concerning their skill and identity. Has anyone in the Department of the Secretary of the Treasury given approval to the plan? Has Mr. Morgenthau seen any merit in the idea? Has President Roosevelt endorsed the measure? Have any individuals anywhere in the United States who are given any recognition as being students of money or having established any claim to speak as authorities approved Mr. PATMAN's plan? It will be interesting to know the names of some of the individuals who have endorsed the proposal so that we can appraise the value of the endorsement in terms of their general reliability, their knowledge, and their right to be heard with respect on the subject.

Congressman PATMAN no doubt believes that it is unfair for me to intimate that the currency which he proposes is nothing but printing-press money. It is all to be backed by Government obligations, he says, the obligations consisting of the adjusted-service certificates themselves. Congressman PATMAN observes that he cannot understand why good money can be issued against interest-paying bonds and not against such obligations as the certificates.

Will it help Congressman PATMAN to understand if it is pointed out that there is a considerable difference in character between interest-paying Government bonds and non-interest-bearing debt certificates? Would Congressman PATMAN, when he invests any portion of his salary, just as soon have the latter as the former? And if he says that he would, does he believe that many investors would join him in this choice? Perhaps the word "obligation" is being too loosely used when it is applied in a precisely similar way both to bonds and to veterans' adjusted-service certificates. For, despite the fact that the Government has promised to pay the certificates, the arrangements which were made for payment provided for setting aside a sum of $112,000,000 each year for 20 years, this money to be collected from revenue and taxes, in order to make the payment. Is it reasonable or sound to point to a debt of this character and to say that it occupies precisely the same status in our financial system as do our Government bonds?

Now, if Congressman PATMAN is right in his contentions, if he believes that a Government debt of this kind can be used as the basis for the payment of $2,000,000,000, without taxes and without any harm to our present money, then, indeed, we are in a happy state. For, according to this theory, all we need to do to have continual prosperity is for the Nation to be constantly in debt to as many of its citizens as possible. Let us issue Government obligations to all the farmers who are to receive funds in the future. Let us issue Government obligations to all our Government employees, to all the unemployed who are to be given Public Works jobs, to all the school teachers, and to all our Regular soldiers and sailors, and to everyone else in the country. Then, using these "Government obligations or Government debts" as the basis, let us issue currency for their payment. If it will work in the case of the veterans—if it is absolutely sound and harmless for $2,000,000,000, why isn't it a good thing to do on the broadest possible scale? This is not a distortion of Congressman PATMAN'S plan. It is an absolutely logical, precisely parallel, extension of his idea. He makes the point that any kind of a Government debt is a good basis for issuing money, and I have replied that if this is sensible, let us have as many of these obligations or debts as possible.

Depressions will be ended forever. We need not make any provision for unemployment reserves or do any advance Public Works planning. All we will require are continuing and extensive debt reserves, which can be used as the basis of issuing new money to various groups of citizens whenever there is a touch of hard times.

In the remaining moments I should like to take this opportunity to ask Congressman PATMAN a number of questions, which I hope he will answer to the best of his ability in the rebuttal period allotted to him.

Question no. 1: If you were the trustee of an insurance company, Mr. PATMAN, would you feel yourself legally and morally justified in providing for the payment of 20-year endowment insurance policies at their face value 10 years before they were due, even though such an act would increase your popularity among the individuals who held the policies?

Question no. 2: Do you believe that the American Legion is representative of all the World War veterans, and if you do believe this, do you admit or deny their official claims that the members of the Legion have twice the earning power of the average citizen of the country?

Question no. 3: Have you ever urged, or would you now urge, every American Legion member who has an insurance policy to cash this policy and to spend the proceeds to help recovery?

Question no. 4: Is it your contention, Mr. PATMAN, that any veteran or any citizen who does not borrow cash on his insurance policy and spend this money is holding back economic recovery?

Question no. 5: Do you believe that such responsibilities as the Nation has incurred toward its soldiers and their dependents are being discharged fairly and justly by the prepayment of a debt due in 1945, when at the same time it is part of your knowledge that the widow of an American soldier who was killed in battle in France is now receiving but $30 per month in Government compensation? And if a choice must be made between paying the $2,000,000,000 soldiers' bonus or making adequate payment to such widows as I have described, which choice would you make?

Question no. 6: Do you contend, Mr. PATMAN, that former President Coolidge was wrong when he said: "We have no money to bestow upon a class of people that is not taken from the whole people. Our first concern must be the Nation as a whole * * *. To attempt to make a money payment out of the earnings of the people to those who are physically well and financially able is to abandon one of our most cherished American ideals."

Question no. 7: Do you believe, Mr. PATMAN, that former President Hoover was wrong when he said: "Nothing will give a greater flow of confidence to our country today than your enlistment and the vigorous support which you are capable of giving to this effort to prevent additional burdens upon your Government from whatever quarters they may come?"

Question no. 8: Do you believe, Mr. PATMAN, that President Roosevelt was wrong when he said to the American Legion members in October 1933: "* * * you and I are well aware of the simple fact that, as every day passes, the people of this country are less and less willing to tolerate benefits for any one group of citizens which must be paid for by others?"

Question no. 9: Do you believe that there is any essential difference between the soldier on the battlefields of France who, in an hour of great peril for his country, announced that he demanded an increase in wages or he would quit fighting, and the veteran of today, who, in an hour of great distress among his countrymen, with a nation straining every resource to bring about recovery, demands the payment now of a debt due 10 years hence?

Question no. 10: Do you sincerely believe, Mr. PATMAN, that if your bill is enacted into law that there will be no demands for pensions for widows, without regard to the date of marriage to the veteran and without regard to the date or cause of the veteran's death? Do you sincerely believe that if this bonus is paid now that there will not soon be a demand for a pension to be paid to every living veteran, without regard to disability or any other entitlement beyond the fact of having worn his country's uniform in time of war?

In closing, let me say that I like to think that numbered among my unseen audience are the shadowy forms of those veterans of Kitchener's "contemptibles" who died on the retreat from Mons; that there are figures in horizon blue who died before Verdun, as well as those men in olive drab who gave their lives in Belleau Wood.

I wonder what they would think of the spectacle of many of their able-bodied comrades in arms standing in line on the steps of the Federal Treasury, tin cup in hand, demanding cash in times like these for a service which cost other men their lives.

I think I should be ashamed to hear their comments.

In my rejoinder I stated:

That I have been for several years a member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation of the House of Representatives is one reason that I have been so actively identified with their cause. Much of the work in Congress is done in committees. The Members of the House expect the members of a committee to be well informed on the subjects coming before their committee.

OPPONENT HAS NOT DENIED

My honorable opponent has not denied that the veterans did not receive interest on the debt which was confessed to them from 1918, or the time the services were rendered, to 1925, the date of the certificates.

He has not denied that the soldiers received very low wages and practically all they did receive was consumed in different ways, including payments to an insurance fund; that the Government collected from the meager wages of the soldier the sum of $400,000,000, which went into this insurance fund and was used for the protection of the dependents of their dead buddies, and they did not receive one penny of this money back after leaving the service.

He has not denied that the war contractors, railroads, and Federal employees were given billions and billions of dollars in adjusted pay after the war was over as adjustment of their wartime service; and that they received 6 percent interest from the time they claimed the payments were due until they were made; that income-tax payers received approximately $3,000,000,000 in adjustments on their income-tax payments made during and by reason of the war, and that interest at the rate of 6 percent was allowed from 1918, or the time of the alleged overpayment. While at the same time the veterans were asked to take their $1 a day for home service and $1.25 for service overseas 27 years later at 4-percent interest from 1925—the veterans being deprived of 7 years' interest.

Nor has my honorable opponent denied that the adjusted-service certificates were so arranged that it would permit banking institutions and the Government to consume in compound interest one-half of what the veterans were entitled to; that they would never receive a substantial amount but would get their money piecemeal, or in dribs, and would pay from 6 percent to 8 percent interest, compounded annually, on what they would borrow.

Nor has my honorable opponent denied that the Treasury has $8,000,000,000 in gold at this time which belongs to the Government, which is sufficient to issue $20,000,000,000 on a 40-percent gold reserve basis, and that we have outstanding today only five and a half billion dollars.

PUT A FORD RADIATOR ON A FRANKLIN CAR

He has stated that the veterans are not entitled to the same rights as banks in regard to obtaining money on Government obligations payable January 1, 1945, because when a bank deposits a Government obligation, payable at that time, it is interest-bearing, and the banks can collect interest each year until 1945, whereas there is no interest due between now and 1945 on the veterans' certificates. In answer to that I will state that such a distinction is in the interest of the Government, because the Government will save that much interest while getting money into circulation. It is true if the banks deposit such an obligation, they will get an annual bonus until 1945 in the form of interest on the bonds deposited, while at the same time they are using the money, whereas the veterans will receive the money, put it into circulation, and there will be no annual bonus on this amount of circulation between now and 1945 or after that time.

In Texas in the early days of automobiles the legislature passed a law requiring that each owner should purchase a metallic number seal from the State each year, which metallic seal must be at all times displayed on the front of the radiator of the automobile. An enthusiastic purchaser of a new car rushed to the tax collector's office, purchased his seal, and while standing and reading the instructions said to the collector: "This says that the seal must be placed on the radiator." The collector replied, "Yes; that is the law. It will have to be placed there." The applicant replied,

"My car doesn't have a radiator. It is a Franklin car." The collector then promptly replied, "I'd advise you to go out and purchase a Ford radiator and put it on the front of your car so you can comply with the law by putting the seal on it."

Applying this story to my opponent's argument: If he insists that there must be interest-bearing bonds for the issuance of money, I am willing for the Government to issue to each veteran an interest-bearing bond for the remainder due and then permit, or even require, him to deposit the bond and receive new money in return for it. This will be meeting the objection of my opponent, which is really a distinction without a difference.

SHOULD INSURANCE POLICIES BE CASHED?

I am asked if I favor all people holding insurance policies accepting cash settlements in order to speed recovery by putting the money in circulation. No; I do not advise that. The inference that the adjusted-service certificate is just an insurance policy is rather far-fetched. It is true that an effort was made to place it in that class, but the fact remains, an adjusted-service certificate represents an honest debt that has been accepted and confessed by the Congress of the United States to veterans of the World War for services rendered and is not in the class of just an insurance policy. It represents the $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day for service overseas that veterans were entitled to really as of the time they rendered the service.

ARE VETERANS SO WELL OFF?

The gentleman further states that 94 percent of the American Legion members carry insurance policies averaging $12,000. If that is true as to Legion members, I am sure it is not true as to veterans generally. I have never seen that statement from an authentic source, and I do not believe it correctly represents the facts. Neither do I believe that it is true that the members of the American Legion are twice as well off as the general average of people. I have never seen that statement from an authentic source, and I do not believe that it correctly represents the fact. I believe the gentleman has been misinformed.

These statements do not harmonize with statements that are generally made that 85 percent of the veterans do not have anything to leave their families, in the event of their deaths, except the remainder due on their adjusted-service certificates and that practically all the veterans are in debt and if the money is paid to them now it will be used to pay their debts.

It is true that veterans are in the prime of life; the average age is 42½ years. It may also be said that regardless of any war veterans' pensions or anything else the people who are now 62½ years of age were better off 20 years ago, in the prime of life, in many ways than those of other age groups. I am quite sure if a correct check-up were made it would be discovered that those of the same age as the veterans, and who did not serve during the war, are as well off, if not better, than the veterans are.

PAPER MONEY

My opponent also says that the money I propose to issue is nothing but "paper" money and adds "why not pay off the entire national debt the same way and issue money to everybody." He overlooks the fact that I am only proposing the issuance of money within safe bounds and limitations; and although I personally do not believe a gold reserve necessary for a domestic medium of exchange, I am showing how we have sufficient gold for a 100-percent gold coverage of all the money that we propose to issue as well as the money now outstanding.

I am not proposing, neither am I in favor of, destroying the monetary system. I want to make it stronger instead of weaker; I want it used in the interest and for the benefit of all the people instead of a few.

GERMANY'S INFLATION

The illustration in regard to Germany's inflation is not in any way comparable to our proposal. After the war the German people owed more money than they could pay. They could not cancel the debts, and they did not have the money to pay the debts with, but through their Government their representatives had a right to authorize an issuance of an unlimited amount of money, the kind that could be used to liquidate the debts; therefore, the German people deliberately printed money until it was worthless for the purpose of wiping out certain indebtedness. A farmer could take a bushel of wheat and liquidate a $10,000 mortgage. A carpenter could work a half day and pay all the debts he had accumulated in a lifetime, including debts on his home. This was a deliberate, well-planned, inflationary policy conceived for the purpose of destroying a monetary system. No one in this country has such a thing in mind, to my knowledge.

EXPERIMENTAL CURRENCY

In regard to its being experimental currency, it will be the same kind of currency that is being issued every day. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington is printing and delivering on an average of 4 tons of paper money a day to the banks of the country. Much of this money is delivered in return for a deposit of Government obligations payable January 1, 1945.

Therefore, the money we propose to issue is not experimental currency, unless the currency that is now being issued and has over a long period of time been issued to the banks is experimental currency.

REJOINDER IMPROMPTU

The gentleman has asked me several questions. Since my rejoinder is necessarily impromptu and short, I have very little time to give consideration to these questions.

INSURANCE POLICY VOLUNTARY CONTRACT

One question is if I were a trustee of an insurance company, would I feel legally and morally justified in providing for the payment of 20-year endowment insurance policies at their face value 10 years before they are due? The answer to that is, no. The proposal we make is not similar to any such proposal as that. The one purchasing an insurance policy does so voluntarily, knows what he is getting, its terms and conditions, and he pays his money for it. The veteran was forced to take or leave alone the adjusted-service certificate. It was not a voluntary contract. He delivered services for which he was entitled to pay. Congress confessed that he did; that entitled him to a sum of money. The certificate was forced on him, even its terms and conditions, which is not true as to the ordinary private insurance contract.

SOLDIERS TURN OVER IN GRAVES

The gentleman referred to what a soldier would think who was killed in Belleau Woods if he knew that his comrades were asking for the payment of this debt. It is my opinion that if this payment would disturb such a soldier who so heroically and unselfishly gave his life to the cause of his country, he would probably turn over in his grave many times if he knew about the billions and billions of dollars that were given to war contractors, railroads, and others in adjusted pay on contracts that did not exist, on contracts that represented a violation of law, on informal contracts, on every kind of contract, and no kind of contract, together with liberal-interest allowances after a generous padding.

WHICH ORGANIZATION REPRESENTS VETERANS?

In answer to question no. 2, I will say that I believe that the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars represent the sentiment of the World War veterans. May it also be remembered that 90 percent of the members of these two organizations do not receive pensions or compensation in any form from the United States Government. Your organization, the American Veterans Association, Inc., has only a membership of one-fifth of 1 percent of the veterans and, therefore, you cannot claim to represent the sentiment of many of them. I made this statement in my opening remarks, and the audience is at liberty to believe that it is a correct statement since it stands undenied. I do not question their patriotism or sincerity of purpose. I am sure they all have splendid war records—I know some of them do—but I do question any claim they might make that they represent the sentiment of a very large group of veterans.

VETERANS' WIDOWS $30 A MONTH

Another question is: If I must make a choice between paying the veterans $2,000,000,000, and in raising the compensation of $30 a month now paid to a widow of a deceased veteran, which choice would I make? My answer is that widows of veterans must come first. Care for those who suffered by reason of their services to the country in time of war and care for the dependents of those who lost their lives in the war always come first with me. However, if these widows are not getting a sufficient amount it could even be doubled without being a drop in the bucket compared to $2,000,000,000, and would not in the smallest or slightest degree interfere with the payment of the veterans' adjusted-service certificates. Most, if not practically all, of these widows also receive $57.50 a month insurance, making $87.50 in all. In addition they also receive allowances for their children, if they have children, and if they do not have children, doubtless many of them are very glad to supplement their incomes with work that they are qualified to do and enjoy doing. The gentleman seems to be very solicitous about World War widows. I am inclined to believe it is an afterthought.

NO HEARINGS ASKED FOR

I am a member of the Committee in the House of Representatives on World War Veterans' Legislation. I am chairman of the subcommittee on hospitalization. Since the gentleman is so solicitous about those who suffered in time of and since the war and the dependents of those who died, I wonder why it is that neither he nor his organization has ever asked for consideration of a bill that would correct these abuses that he claims to exist. If he had ever asked for such a hearing, I believe that I would know it, and I have never heard of it.

WAS PRESIDENT HOOVER WRONG?

Another question is, Do I believe that former President Hoover was wrong when he made a certain statement, which I do not have time to read. My answer is "Yes." Not having an opportunity to read and analyze the statement, I can be on the safe side by answering "yes", because Mr. Hoover, although sincere, was usually wrong. It is possible he was right when he made this particular statement, but if he was I will say it was the exception, and not the rule with Mr. Hoover.

WILL SERVICE PENSIONS BE DEMANDED?

The gentleman also asked me if there would be a demand for pensions to every living veteran without regard to disability, and to the widows without regard to the date of marriage if this is passed. I am not in a position to answer that, because I do not know and have no right to speak for all World War veterans and their organizations. This much is evident: That if these certificates are permitted to be eaten up or consumed by the payment of compound interest and the veterans receive only $1 out of every $2 they were expecting to receive, very likely public sentiment will be on their side for almost any proposal that they make that will in any way correct this wrong. However, if the veterans are paid now, and they should make an unreasonable demand, public sentiment would be against them, and such unreasonable demand could be very quickly stopped. I think the gentleman's question is anticipating a great deal and is rather visionary and speculative in the hope that he will scare someone, the same way that an effort is made to scare people through use of catch phrases and terms, such as "fiat" money and "printing press" money.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, I have not answered in detail every question that was asked, but generally I believe that I have answered them, and I still believe that those who are informed on this question will say that we have the right side and the American Veterans' Association has the wrong side of this question.

Under leave to extend my remarks the following is inserted:

Exactly 10 minutes before the broadcast a representative of my honorable opponent delivered to me a copy of the questions that were going to be asked. During that 10 minutes we had our pictures made, our voices tested over the microphone and a few other little things that were necessarily arranged on the last minute. Naturally, I had no time to give serious consideration to the questions.

After answering in my impromptu rejoinder all that I could or that attracted my attention, I have again read these questions and the speech made by my honorable opponent and desire to make the following comments:

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S DUTY

His opposition indicates that the States should owe a duty to veterans instead of the Federal Government. This is the wrong assumption, since soldiers served the Nation and not the State. In regard to our great President's obtaining jobs for three and one-half million wage earners, I want to say that I am in complete sympathy with the proposal and will support him 100 percent in his efforts to do so.

It should not go unnoticed that the payment of $2,000,000,000 to veterans will create additional jobs, since buying power will be stimulated and there will be an extra demand for goods.

PAYMENTS WILL NOT INTERFERE WITH NONVETERANS

It cannot be said that the payment to veterans will interfere with relief to nonveterans in any way. In fact, if there are 20,000,000 people on the relief roll, I believe a conservative estimate would be that 1,000,000 veterans are on the relief roll, together with their families, representing about 5,000,000 of the 20,000,000 people on relief. If the veterans are paid the remainder due them now, they will be taken off relief, at least for a reasonable time, and the other 15,000,000 people will have more money to be expended for their benefit. It will not be detrimental to the veterans to do this, because if they do not get the money now, it will be paid to the banks and the Government in compound interest, and they will lose it anyway. I do not know a veteran who prefers relief to spending his own money.

Further, why should those interested in the nonveteran on relief, as we all are, object to this payment? It will not cost the Government anything and will certainly not take one dollar from the Treasury that could possibly be used for relief.

NO TAXES WILL BE LEVIED TO PAY

Another statement is that those who must pay this bill are actually financially less able than those who are to receive it. The gentleman is assuming that taxes must be levied to pay this bill, which is not true. Such payment will not create a new debt. It will merely convert one form of Government obligation into another form. Therefore there will be no additional taxes levied to pay it.

THREE PERCENT OF PEOPLE WILL GET IT

He also seems to object to the payment because it will go to the rich, not only to the poor, and to only 3 percent of the citizens of the country. He even calls it a "hand-out." The answer is it will go to those who hold certificates, the ones to whom Congress has confessed the debt. It is not a "hand-out" because the debt has been acknowledged by Congress.

Probably it will not go to more than 3 percent of the people, but, including the veterans' families and the ones dependent upon them and who will be benefited by such a payment, it will include a large percentage of the citizens of our country.

UNIFORM DISTRIBUTION

It will go uniformly over the entire Nation. It will require no cost of administration. It will not create additional jobs for politicians, or anyone else, to distribute the money; but, on the other hand, it will actually abolish one bureau in Washington, the Adjusted Compensation Division, which will cost the Government more than $10,000,000 between now and 1945, and this expense will be saved.

The gentleman refers to a veteran receiving $50 a week. If he is referring to the average veteran, I think his figures are very, very high; and, furthermore, his illustration of a $50-a-week veteran calling on his civilian neighbor, who receives $25 a week, to pay him is somewhat ridiculous in view of the facts that are undisputed.

ENORMOUS NATIONAL DEBT

It is true that the national debt stands at $28,000,000,000. Now, however, it is easier for the people to pay this $28,000,000,000 with what they have to pay with than it was for them to pay the national debt when it was $16,000,000,000, since everything they had to pay with at that time was so much cheaper than it is now. Personally, I would pay off the entire national debt with currency and save nearly a billion dollars a year in interest charges. It can safely be done by changing the reserve requirements of banks at the same time the money is paid out. If we were to issue a large sum of money and permit the law to remain that the banks can lend $10 to every $1 in their vaults, there would probably be undue expansion of the currency; but as we increase the amount of money, we can charge reserve requirements so the banks can only lend 8 to 1, or 6 to 1, or 4 to 1, or, possibly, reach that stage which I hope we will reach one of these days when banking institutions can only lend the actual money that they have in their possession or subject to their possession. In other words, a 100-percent money-reserve requirement. This will take that big national debt, which the gentleman now says rests on the shoulders of everyone, off their shoulders, and at the same time we will have a monetary system just as safe and sound as the one we have today; in fact, it will be a great improvement.

SUGGESTION OF MAYOR OF NEW YORK CITY

Major LaGuardia, a great mayor of a great city—the city of New York—advocates the Government loaning money to municipalities, counties, and States for as low as one-eighth of 1 percent for public improvements. I think the mayor is right and his proposal is a constructive one and should be adopted within safe bounds and limitations. What we propose to do will be a step in that direction.

EDISON WAS RIGHT

Thomas A. Edison was right when he said that any Government that can issue a dollar bond drawing interest can as well issue a dollar bill that does not draw interest. They are both backed by the credit of the Nation and the taxing power of the Government. If one is good the other is good. The bill is easier to pay because it does not draw interest.

HEAVY INTEREST BURDEN

It will probably interest the gentleman to know that the average interest payment by the Government today is 3 percent. Therefore, the interest on our present national debt of $28,000,000,000 within the next 30 years, if our monetary system remains as it is now, will be $38,000,000,000; over the next 60 years it will be $130,000,000,000; and we will still owe the principal sum of $28,000,000,000.

IDIOTIC MONETARY SYSTEM—A VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS

I insist that no country on earth, including our own, would think about adopting our present monetary system if we were starting the country anew. Over a period of over 100 years, through so-called "perfecting amendments" and various laws, an idiotic and imbecilic monetary system has grown up. It cannot be corrected quickly, and the administration in power that attempts to change it substantially must have the sentiment of the people behind it, otherwise it could not be done. Probably my voice is just a voice in the wilderness, yet I am doing everything in my power to let the people know about this idiotic monetary system that is costing them a billion dollars a year, approximately, in interest on Government bonds that we should never be obligated to pay.

ACTUAL MONEY EARNS $2 ANNUALLY

We have on an average of $5,000,000,000 in circulation over a period of the last one or two decades. The annual interest bill paid by the people on all debts has been $10,000,000,000. Therefore, through our present pencil-mark, bookkeeping transaction, inflated credit monetary system, every $1 earns $2 over a period of a year. It is little consoling to the farmer or wage earner who has an annual income of $500 that his earning power is equal to just $250. In other words, he earns in a year only what $250 in actual money earns in a year.

UNITED STATES NOTES

My opponent indicates that the money we advocate issuing under the terms of my bill is unlike any money heretofore issued by the Government. The Government has $346,000,000 of United States notes outstanding that have been in circulation since the War between the States, more than 70 years. It is good money. No one has been paying interest on it, which has saved the people $12,000,000,000 on the basis of 5 percent interest compounded annually. A plan that has been in successful operation 70 years is certainly not an experiment. Our proposal is to pay the remainder due on the certificates with United States notes.

$15,000,000,000 BONUS

My opponent states that the Government has expended $7,000,000,000 on World War veterans' pensions, compensation, and in other benefits for such veterans and their dependents. The fact is that during our entire national existence our country has expended $15,000,000,000 on such benefits for veterans and their dependents of all wars. It is a coincidence, but an interesting one, that our Government has, during the same length of time, paid $15,000,000,000 in interest to holders of Government securities. Since it was unnecessary for the latter amount to have ever been paid, those in control of the money and credit supply of the Nation have collected in what may be termed a pure "bonus" as much as all our country's defenders and their dependents.

WHO FAVORS MONETARY REFORM?

The people one of these days will get the truth about this idiotic system that no particular person or party is responsible for, and when they do the country will be safe and the people will be safe and an enormous amount of money will be saved.

The gentleman asks me to name someone who endorses the monetary changes that I advocate. Prof. Irving Fisher advocates a 100-percent reserve for banks, and what I have said about money coincides with his views if I correctly interpret them from his writings and books.

Former United States Senator Robert L. Owen, framer of the original Federal Reserve Act—before the so-called "perfecting amendments" that ruined it—has endorsed monetary changes similar to the ones I advocate.

Many other prominent people have similar views.

I doubt that administration advisers have had the time to give this subject the consideration it deserves, and besides the administration cannot go very far in advance of public sentiment. We must first sell the changes to the country.

BANKS AND BANKERS I REFER TO

In regard to what I have said about banks, I desire to add banks are indispensable. Bankers are usually leading business men in every community. The local banker is not to be individually blamed, for he is helpless in the grasp of and under the domination of the systems of false premises and unsound economics. It is the system, not the individual banks or bankers, that I am referring to.

POLITICAL MOTIVES

My honorable opponent in his question no. 2 leaves an inference which I entirely overlooked or did not hear when he was delivering his address. In his question, asking if I would do such and such a thing, even though such an act would increase my popularity among the individuals who are affected, indicating that I only act or attempt to do things if it will increase my popularity and be helpful to me in a political way. Anyone who is acquainted with Congress knows that every Member of Congress must take sides on every important question and that he makes enemies every time he accepts a side of a question. Other people can refrain from expressing their views and save their popularity, but not so with one who is in public life, as a Member of Congress. The gentleman has no more right to infer that I am influenced by political support than I have a right to infer that he is acting only because of the salary he draws from the organization he represents. I wonder if he would give up his job and refuse to further fight the veterans who are in need of this money if I were able to convince him that he is wrong. I shall presume that he would. I do not question his sincerity, and he has no right to question mine.

TIN CUP

At the conclusion of his talk he also refers to a soldier on the steps of the Federal Treasury, tin cup in hand, demanding cash in times like these on their adjusted-service certificates. The war contractors did not use a tin cup; it was too small. Since he refers to tin cup in hand, may I suggest that the only veterans that I know of that have tin cups in hand are the American Veterans Association, whose members go about over Wall Street soliciting from wealthy veterans a contribution equal to the amount that these wealthy veterans can receive on their certificates, in order to fight and oppose their needy comrades who honestly believe that this is a just debt and should be paid now, and which such payment would contribute greatly to the comfort and welfare of themselves and family, as well as aiding the country generally. Since I have mentioned about the American Veterans Association carrying a tin cup, I will insert the following letter, which is self-explanatory. It is on the stationery of the American Veterans Association, Inc., executive headquarters, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City, and is dated December 24, 1934:

DEAR MR. BLANK: Next Wednesday, January 2, is the last day on which veterans may apply for their adjusted-service certificates to which they are entitled by virtue of their war records.

If you have not already obtained your certificate, would you be willing to apply for it before next Wednesday and turn the proceeds over to the American Veterans Association? A total of 300 veterans, many of whose names appear on the enclosed list, have donated funds available on their bonuses to the association.

By means of these gifts the association is financing its fight against the prepayment of the bonus and is laying the foundation for a carefully prepared, long-time battle against the entire pension racket. Founded 2 years ago and possessing some 10,000 veterans as members, this association believes the time has come to call a halt on the exploitation of the veterans by lobbyists and politicians at the expense of the taxpayers. Do you realize that even today—16 years after the peace—a quarter of the Federal Budget is being paid as benefits to veterans, their dependents, or widows? I hope that you are with us in this fight and that you will accord us your support.

If you will promptly return the enclosed application or write me for further information, I shall see that one of our staff communicates with you before January 2 and attends to all the details connected with your application.

If you already have your certificate and have not borrowed on it, the time element is not important. In that case, will you please so advise us by special note on the application blank, and we shall get in touch with you after the New Year.

Sincerely yours,

D. A. HOBART,
National Commander.

In other words, my honorable opponent, the national commander of the American Veterans Association, places himself in the position of standing in Wall Street with a tin cup in hand. The statement that veterans receive one-quarter of the Federal Budget is incorrect. This policy of obtaining money is very much like the policy that has always been used by antibonus leagues. One of the first ones that was organized was financed by Wall Street interests, who sent out solicitors, to whom a list of contributors and a letter was given. That letter read as follows (a parrot could be taught to say it):

CANVASS FOR SOLICITORS

Mr. Smith, as you see from my introductory letter, I represent the Ex-Service Men's Anti-Bonus League, which is an organization composed entirely of veterans, whose aim is to give as much prominence to veteran antibonus sentiment as has been given the probonus opinion by certain members of the American Legion.

You doubtless are aware that the coming bonus bill will center about approximately 10 doubtful Senators, and we are assured by Senate antibonus leaders that several of these will gladly vote against the bonus if they are able to point to veterans in their constituency who do not want a bonus.

You will note from our letterhead that our activities are supervised by an administrative board of prominent men. (At this point be sure that prospect reads names of administrative board.)

Up to this time we have not gone after money intensively, because our work is best accomplished by concentrating on this matter when the public mind is applied to it. We must immediately have $200,000 to cover our next 3 months' expenditures, and I am here to ask you for a contribution toward this work. (At this point exhibit list of contributors and estimate what you think prospect would give, and endeavor to get check on the spot. If any objection is made by prospect on the grounds of not having heard of us in the papers, the obvious answer is that we have spent 7 months in laying a suitable foundation without wasting money or effort on immediate publicity.) During this time we have lined up 203 newspapers who will give us full cooperation, gained assurance of cooperation on the part of nearly every major chamber of commerce in the United States, and accumulated through ballot an extensive mailing list of potential members.

By way of reference refer prospect to Merchants' Association of New York, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the United States Chamber of Commerce. In the case of the last organization, exhibit letter to Electric Bond & Share Co. written by the Washington manager of the United States Chamber committee. (In testimony before Ways and Means Committee of House, 1924.)

It was disclosed before a congressional committee in 1924 that one of these organizations spent $96,000 getting 10,000 members. I do not know what the American Veterans' Association spends, but I presume that if the law is complied with a statement of receipts and expenditures will be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, because to my mind the activities of the organization bring it within the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925.

THOSE THAT DO NOT NEED IT

The American Veterans' Association, Inc., forwarded to prospects what is known as a "list of the members of the justice committee who have donated from funds available on their adjusted-compensation—that is, bonus—certificates", in which the following were listed—this list was mentioned in the D. A. Hobart letter of Dec. 24, 1934:

On October 6, 1934, Mr. Edwin O. Perrin, one of these contributors, wrote a letter to the American Veterans Association, Inc., in which it was stated (only a part of the letter is quoted):

I have applied for my adjusted-compensation certificates and have donated the funds available on that certificate to your work for pension reform. You have asked me how I came to decide upon making this particular form of contribution. * * * In talking this whole thing over, I found that many of my friends have been forced, through stress of circumstances, to borrow on their certificates. With these men I, of course, can take no issue. But in considering my own case I was able to say with reasonable certainty that it was hardly likely I should be so reduced as to be a charge on the Federal taxpayer.

A copy of Mr. Perrin's letter was sent with Mr. Hobart's appeal for funds, dated December 24, 1934. I repeat, these gentlemen are entitled to their views. The certificates belong to them. They can dispose of the proceeds any way they desire. However, since Mr. Hobart has brought up the tin-cup illustration, it is at least interesting to know the above facts.

VICTORY IN SIGHT

While we are in sight of victory, let us hope that no effort will be made by our friends to divide our forces.

Congress and the country have been sold on H. R. 1.

ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow I announce to the House the death of our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

In the death of Congressman GRIFFIN the House has lost a valuable Member and the Borough of the Bronx, which he represented so ably for 16 years, an able Representative. During that period he took a great interest not only in the borough he represented but in his State and Nation. I know of no man in this House who gave of his time and energy more than Congressman GRIFFIN. Not only will he be missed in his congressional district but the State and the Nation have lost a great citizen and soldier.

Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 51

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as members of the committee to attend the funeral, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. BOYLAN, Mr. FITZPATRICK, and Mr. BUCKLEY.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remainder of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Wednesday, January 16, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

122. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Chairman, Federal Power Commission, transmitting Fourteenth Annual Report of the Federal Power Commission and a statement showing the names and compensation of the members and employees of the Commission, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GASQUE: A bill (H. R. 3891) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Waccamaw River at Conway, S. C.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 3892) to amend the naturalization laws of the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BULWINKLE: A bill (H. R. 3893) to provide for the payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates in two annual installments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: A bill (H. R. 3894) to stimulate competitive buying of swine, to provide for establishment of standards for grading swine, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RAMSPECK: A bill (H. R. 3895) to protect labor in its old age; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 3896) to provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, to extend the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, Jan. 14, 1935)

The Senate met, in executive session, at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day, Monday, January 14, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

SENATOR FROM VERMONT

Mr. McNARY presented the credentials of WARREN R. AUSTIN, chosen a Senator from the State of Vermont for the term of 6 years, beginning on the 3d day of January 1935, which were ordered to be filed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF VERMONT.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 6th day of November 1934 WARREN R. AUSTIN was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Vermont a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of 6 years, beginning on the 3d day of January 1935.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, Charles M. Smith, and our seal hereto affixed at Montpelier, this 10th day of January, A. D. 1935.

CHARLES M. SMITH, Governor.

By the Governor:

RAWSON C. MYRICK,
Secretary of State.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report favorably the nominations of Joseph P. Kennedy, of New York; George C. Mathews, of Wisconsin; Ferdinand Pecora, of New York; James M. Landis, of Massachusetts; and Robert E. Healy, of Vermont, to be members of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

From the same committee, I also report back favorably the nomination of Henry E. Hoagland, of Ohio, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and James A. Moffett, of New York, to be Federal Housing Administrator.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, reported favorably the nomination of August E. Giegengack, of New York, to be Public Printer, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice George H. Carter, resigned.

He also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence, as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the issue pertaining to the participation of the United States in the Permanent Court of International Justice has been pending in some form for almost 12 years. During the last Congress there were presented to the Congress so many measures of an emergency character intimately associated with domestic conditions that it was not found practicable to bring before the Senate for consideration and action the question of the entrance of the United States into the World Court.

It has been suggested by some authorities who oppose membership of the United States in the World Court that the present is an inopportune occasion to consider the subject; that there remains undisposed of a number of legislative proposals which are of vital consequence, and that consideration by the Senate of the protocols pertaining to the World Court will unduly interfere with the disposition of those measures and prevent action by the Senate on subjects which are affected with emergency consideration.

Since the Senate met on the 3d day of January, due to the fact that it was the beginning of a new Congress and all measures not disposed of during the last Congress had gone back to the respective committees having jurisdiction, there was nothing of great importance on the calendar for the Senate to consider. Throughout the period which has elapsed since the 3d of January our committees have been at work and proposed legislation is being considered, but very few measures of great consequence have as yet been reported.

When one contemplates the 12-year delay which has taken place in final action on the subject, he may well conclude that the demand incorporated in the platforms of both the major political parties of the United States during the conventions of 1932, favoring adherence by the United States to the Court, should meet with response by the Senate. It will be recalled that the Democratic platform contains a provision reading as follows:

We advocate adherence to the World Court with the appending reservations.

The Republican platform on the subject is expressed in the following language:

The acceptance by America of membership in the World Court has been approved by three successive Republican Presidents, and we commend this attitude of supporting in this form the settlement of international disputes by the rule of law. America should join its influence and gain a voice in this institution, which would offer us a safer, more judicial, and expeditious instrument for the constantly recurring questions between us and the other nations that is now available by arbitration.

It may be pointed out that these platform provisions were adopted in the summer of 1932, at a time when the country was in the grip of a great depression, suffering from conditions which have been relieved in part, we believe, but which admittedly have not completely passed.

I do not intend at this time to undertake to present to the Senate a summary of the resolutions which have been adopted during the years that have elapsed since the subject was first transmitted to the Senate by President Harding in 1923; but I do desire to point out the fact that the American Bar Association and the organizations of the bar in many of the States, both State-wide and local, have adopted declarations advocating the adherence of the United States to the World Court protocols.

The subject matter of the protocols is one which it may be said is peculiarly within the purview of such studies as lawyers are in the habit of making. It is not now recalled that in any instance an organization of American lawyers has expressed opposition to favorable action by the United States. So far as the legal profession in this country is concerned, and so far as its members have knowledge of the subject and have expressed an opinion concerning it, that profession is committed to the action now proposed in the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. I merely desire to correct the Senator's statement to the extent of saying that the Montana Bar Association had the matter before them this summer and went on record against the World Court. In other words, they defeated a resolution which was brought in by the committee advocating adherence to the World Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. But took no action expressing the opinion of the Bar Association.

Mr. WHEELER. The sentiment of the Bar Association would seem to be implied by the action in defeating the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand from the Senator's statement that the Bar Association of Montana—probably through the influence of the Senator from Montana—has recently committed itself to the rejection of a resolution relating to the subject.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator will pardon me, let me say to him that I was not present at the Bar Association meeting and knew nothing of the action they had taken until after it was taken, and the Senator is quite wrong in even intimating that I was influential in defeating the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I am making no serious issue with the Senator from Montana. He had a perfect right, if he had chosen to do so, to appear before the Bar Association. I point out now, however, in connection with the statement just made by the Senator from Montana, that on August 15, 1931, the Montana State Bar Association did adopt the following resolution:

Whereas the United States, by the authority of the President, has signed the three treaties or protocols providing for the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice; and

Whereas the President has submitted to the Senate these treaties to be ratified; and

Whereas these treaties are approved by the administration and by many leaders of both political parties; and

Whereas this association believes that the interests of the United States have been properly safeguarded and that the Court is a great constructive agency for the maintenance of international peace: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Montana State Bar Association, in annual meeting assembled, on August 15, 1931, respectfully urges upon the Senate of the United States prompt ratification of these treaties in order that the United States at the earliest possible date may signify their adherence to the Permanent Court of International Justice; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to each member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States [Senate], and to our own Senators, Hon. T. J. Walsh and Hon. Burton K. Wheeler.

So it appears, taking into consideration the statement just made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], that the Montana Bar Association has adopted one resolution urging the Senate promptly to ratify these protocols, and that last summer, in its session, it declined to adopt a second resolution.

I digress here to pay what seems to me to be a deserved tribute to the late Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh, who served so long and ably in this body. Like his colleague, the present senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], he was a lawyer of notable ability. Senator Walsh enjoyed the confidence, the admiration, and the respect of all the members of his profession; and it will be recalled that he was attached to the principles of international justice as incorporated in the statute and proceedings of the World Court. It is doubtful if any lawyer during the past generation has served in this body with more distinction and integrity and demonstrated more courage and ability than the late Senator Walsh, of Montana. I make this reference to him because of his interest in the subject-matter under consideration, and because of his devotion to the principles that underlie the resolution before the Senate.

The three protocols are now in the possession of the Senate, and a resolution with which most Senators are familiar has been reported with them by the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is not my intention in this address to attempt a discussion of all the phases of this subject or to anticipate the arguments that may be advanced in opposition to the pending resolution. I shall content myself for the most part with a brief outline of the World Court protocols, sketching their history, and finally state to the Senate some of the reasons which to me make it proper and desirable that this body should delay no longer in giving its advice and consent to American adherence to the Permanent Court of International Justice, as recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The first of the three protocols is the protocol of signature of December 16, 1920. It serves merely to set up the statute of the Court. This protocol has been signed by 55 states and ratified by 49, including most of the important states of the world. By becoming a party to this protocol of signature the United States would agree to join with these states in maintaining the Permanent Court of International Justice, but it would not confer any jurisdiction on the Court.

The second of the protocols has been termed the revision protocol of date September 14, 1929. It provides for various amendments to the original statute of the Court. This protocol has been signed by 54 states, of which 46 have ratified.

It is not practicable now to enter into a discussion of the details of these various amendments. Your speaker will content himself with the mere statement that for the most part they are intended to make effective the five reservations adopted by the Senate of the United States on January 27, 1926.

I do not apprehend that there can be any serious objection directed to this protocol in view of the character and purpose of the amendments to the Court's statute which it proposes. Should we enter the Court they will be helpful, not to say necessary, in implementing the various processes to be carried forward.

The third of the protocols, which is designated as the protocol for accession of the United States, also bears date, as does the second, of September 14, 1929. It sets forth the special terms agreed upon for the adherence of the United States to the statute of the Court.

A brief history of this protocol and of the steps previously taken toward the adherence of the United States may be in point at this place.

On February 24, 1923, about 11 years ago, President Harding asked the Senate to advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the protocol of signature dated December 16, 1920, to which the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice is annexed. The Senate subsequently gave its advice and consent, but not until January 27, 1926, approximately 3 years being consumed in the meantime for a resolution of the issues involved in the World Court proposition.

When the advice and consent of the Senate was given there were incorporated five reservations. The first declared that adherence by the United States should not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of this Government to the League of Nations. The opposition to adherence came principally from those who believed or feared that the result of our entry into the Court would be complications with the League of Nations which might, in their opinion, prove harmful.

I did not feel then, and I do not believe now, that accepting membership in the Court would involve the United States with the League of Nations, although admittedly, if the formula as proposed be adopted, this Government will have the privilege, in either the council or the assembly, of asserting its interest in the subject matter and opposition to the entertainment of a request for an advisory opinion.

There is a second part to reservation 1, namely, that the United States, by taking membership in the Court, would assume no obligation under the Treaty of Versailles. I do not care now to elaborate on the thought that this reservation was the outgrowth of an undefined and vague fear on the part of the opponents of the Court that in some mysterious way, which they could not explain and which no one could comprehend, entry into the Court would impose obligations under the Versailles Treaty upon the United States.

The second reservation is to the effect that the United States shall be permitted to participate in the proceedings of the Council or the Assembly of the League in the election of judges or deputy judges. In my viewpoint, there can be no valid question raised that this involves the United States in the affairs of the League of Nations. Manifestly the process by which the judges of the Court are elected made some such provision as that contained in reservation 2 necessary if the United States were to have part in the selection of the judges, and I do not think that anyone here will question the advisability of taking for our Government that much participation in the proceedings of the Council or the Assembly if we are to join the Court. It would not be detrimental in any sense to the United States; it could not be harmful to any interest we have or to any principle for which our Government is believed to stand.

The third reservation prompts little consideration. It was to the effect that the United States would pay a fair share of the Court's expenses as determined and appropriated by the Congress of the United States.

I point out the fact, aggressively and with emphasis, that reservation 3, which has been unqualifiedly agreed to by the signatories already mentioned, constitutes the sole obligation assumed by the United States under the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Reservation 4 relates to withdrawal. There are provisions in some 400 treaties heretofore entered into by this Government which provide for the withdrawal of the parties to the treaties when circumstances which make that course appropriate have arisen. Reservation 4 assures the United States the right of withdrawal at any time.

There is another provision in the reservation which has been accepted by the signatories, namely, that the World Court statute shall not be amended without the consent of the United States. So that the jurisdiction of the Court cannot be altered, nor its processes or proceedings materially modified, except with the approval of this Government.

I pass now to reservation 5.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RADCLIFFE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator spoke about the message of President Harding with reference to our adhering to the Court. Reservation 5 was not incorporated in that message.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no. I thank the Senator for the interruption, because it recalls to my mind a statement which it will be necessary to make very soon in the course of my remarks with reference to the historical analysis of this controversy.

Resolution 5 is the nucleus around which the principal controversies have been gathered. It provides that the Court shall not render any advisory opinion, except publicly, after due notice to all states in the Court, and to all interested states, and after public hearing or opportunity for hearing given to any state concerned.

That feature of reservation 5 has been accepted without qualification in any manner. It is to the second part of reservation 5 now to be quoted, and the manner in which it has been dealt with by the signatories, that the principal objections have been asserted. The second part is as follows:

> Nor shall it (the Court) without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

After the adoption of the 1926 resolution incorporating these five reservations negotiations were conducted with other governments. A conference was held, the signatories of the protocol assembling at Geneva early in September of 1926. At this conference a draft protocol for the acceptance of the Senate reservations was prepared, which was not satisfactory to the United States. Negotiations, after some years, were resumed by President Coolidge, and in March 1929 a committee of jurists, of which Mr. Root was a member, drew up a draft protocol for the adherence of the United States to meet the Senate reservations.

This protocol is the third that I have described and is called the protocol for the accession of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if it will disturb the Senator from Arkansas, I shall not propound the query, but before the Senator proceeds with reservation 5 I want to ask him if it is his opinion that the third protocol accepts definitely the first four reservations?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and I assert and expect to prove during the course of the debate that it accepts the fifth reservation also, but I admit that there is language in the protocol which may be regarded and which has been regarded by some as ambiguous.

On December 9, 1929, the three protocols were signed on behalf of the United States.

I pass now to a more definite consideration of the controversial question involved in reservation 5 and in the Root formula. The protocol of accession sets forth in considerable detail the procedure which would be followed for giving effect to the reservations voted by the Senate on January 27, 1926. The provisions of this protocol constitute an effective acceptance by the other States of the reservations of the United States. The only question that has arisen as to the adequacy of this acceptance relates to the second part of the fifth reservation concerning advisory opinions. This point is fully discussed in a report made to the Senate by the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, joined in by the former Senator from Ohio, Mr. Fess. The report makes clear the conclusion that the interests of the United States would be more adequately protected under any interpretation that may be given to this protocol than by abstention from membership in the court on the part of this Government.

In order that there may be no doubt of the position of the United States with regard to the matter it is recommended and embraced in the resolution of advice and consent that the advice and consent be—

With the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

This subject has been considered at great length on different occasions by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. It seems appropriate at this time to present to the Senate the analysis, or a part of it, made by Mr. Root, who was one of the authors of the protocol of accession. He said:

An essential thing to observe in this protocol is that it establishes as law the second part of the fifth Senate reservation without any change. The second part of the fifth reservation relates solely to the jurisdiction of the Court. It is:

"Nor shall it (the Court), without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest."

Resuming from Mr. Root:

It is purely statutory in form and its incidence is upon the Court alone. It does not impose any prohibition or command upon anyone who may request advisory opinions or who may be interested in them. Like most such statutes, it says nothing about how it may be enforced.

The express acceptance of that provision and the signature and ratification of the formal instrument by all the several nations under whose authority the Court acts, will make it a part of the statute, controlling the conduct of the Court. There are no terms or conditions attached to this acceptance which affect this prohibition or the rights of the United States under it.

The protocol is introduced as follows:

The signatory states and the United States—"have mutually agreed upon the following provisions"—

And so forth.

ARTICLE 1. The said signatories of the said protocol accept the special conditions attached by the United States in the five reservations mentioned above to its adherence to the said protocol upon the terms and conditions set out in the following articles.

The procedural provisions which follow and constitute the terms and conditions referred to in article 1, do not in the slightest degree modify the provisions of the fifth reservation. They relate to matters entirely outside of the prohibition of that reservation. The only provisions which in any manner refer to the jurisdictional rule prescribed in the fifth reservation, far from attempting to change that rule, are expressly declared to be with a view to its effective enforcement.

Article 5 of the protocol says:

"With a view to insuring that the Court shall not without the consent of the United States entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest"—

And so forth.

Then follow the provisions relating not at all to the Court or its jurisdiction but establishing a procedure out of court appropriate to secure full information for the Council before it resolves whether to request an opinion and for the United States before it decides whether to consent and whether to claim an interest.

The theory of these provisions is that to prevent hindrance and embarrassment in the ordinary business of the council—

Or the assembly, I interpolate—

the essential thing is to have at every stage of the proceedings that full mutual information and understanding produced by the process described in diplomatic language as "exchange of views" and that this same frank and open treatment of the businesss will remove all ground for apprehension on the part of the signatory powers lest the United States should divert the power given to her by the fifth reservation for the protection of her own interests into a means of interfering with affairs in which she has no particular concern.

If the fifth reservation had been accepted without being accompanied or followed by some such provision, the first thing the United States would have known about an objectionable request for an advisory opinion would have been by notice from the registrar of the Court to the United States, among the other nations, to the effect that such question was pending before the Court, and the only thing for the United States to do would have been to put before the Court something equivalent to a plea to the jurisdiction, based upon the fifth reservation. This would have left the Council in an unfortunate and injurious position.

The Council would necessarily have sent its request without knowing whether the question was going to be objectionable to the United States, for it had no means of getting direct and authentic information on that subject. It would have had no opportunity to seek from the United States its consent that the Court should give an advisory opinion on the subject. The result would probably be that the Council would be rebuffed by the Court, the plans for settlement of an international controversy, of which the request for an advisory opinion formed a part, would be frustrated and the whole use of advisory opinions, often very important for the prevention of war, especially during the readjustments following the World War, would be made doubtful and uncertain.

I shall not read all that Mr. Root said or all that was expressed in his memorandum supplied to the Committee on Foreign Relations. However, I will quote a little further:

The fifth reservation meets our apprehension as to the action of the Council; but what provision could be found to meet the signatory powers' apprehension regarding the action of the United States under the fifth reservation?

We could not agree to modify the fifth reservation or put an interpretation upon it, because this might affect the conclusiveness of our claim of interest before the Court. But it became apparent that if there could be assured a full, frank explanation, out of Court, between the United States and the Council, of the reasons, if any, why the United States considered that any particular proposed request would affect its interest, there would be no real danger that the Council would send to the Court a request which would require the United States to make to the Court a claim of interest for its own protection, and there would be no real danger that the United States would interpose in Court a claim to bar the jurisdiction except upon questions where the United States really did consider that it had an interest—

And so forth.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, realizing that some lawyers regarded some of the provisions of the Root formula as ambiguous, have reaffirmed the second part of reservation 5. We do that because those who justify the Root formula, including ourselves, believe that there is no conflict, when properly interpreted, between reservation 5 and the Root formula. We do it because we believed that public opinion in the United States and our own opinion justify recognition of the right of the United States to prevent entertainment of an advisory opinion on a subject in which we are involved in dispute with another power or on a question which may become the subject matter of such a dispute.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am profoundly interested in the argument of the Senator from Arkansas, but I want to find what is the opinion of the Senator from Arkansas as to the effect of the understanding of the United States as contained in the resolution of adherence. I was of the opinion that the advice and consent to the three protocols, particularly the one of accession of the United States to the World Court, would make us members of the Court; and therefore, if the purport of the fifth reservation is not already contained in the protocol of accession, this clause of the resolution would be nugatory and of no effect. It merely states the understanding of this body, of the Senate of the United States, but would not be binding on the other signatories.

Mr. ROBINSON. The other signatories have accepted the reservation; but in view of the difference of interpretation, we reaffirm the reservation.

Mr. RUSSELL. But the protocol is the entire contract between the United States and the other signatories, is it not?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. If this understanding is not already embraced, then, within the protocol of accession, the understanding now expressed by the Senate will be of no force and effect?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no. It is my position that the language to which the Senator refers is already in the protocol. It is in identically the same language in the fifth reservation, and that reservation has been accepted; but, in view of the fact that terms and conditions are attached, some have asserted that the protocol constitutes a modification of the fifth reservation. I do not think that is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. This is merely a restatement on our part of our belief, then, that this understanding is embodied in the protocol?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a mere reaffirmation of reservation 5, which, as I said before, has been accepted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator to say, and is it his contention, that with the insertion, which he has just read, placed in the resolution of adherence, that restores reservation 5 in its full legal import?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not quite correct. I do not say, as some have said, including probably the Senator from Idaho, that reservation 5 has been emasculated by the action of the signatories. I say, though, that it makes clear and beyond dispute that reservation 5 has not been modified.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps I stated my question inadequately, but I should like to have the Senator's opinion, because I think the point is important in view of his position.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think beyond a doubt if this resolution be agreed to, the Court cannot, so long as we are a member of the Court, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching a dispute or question in which we have or claim an interest.

Mr. BORAH. Over our objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Over our objection; certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. That belief on the part of the Senator from Arkansas, I take it, in the light of what he has just said, is induced by his construction of the protocol of accession, rather than by his faith in any protection afforded by the last clause of the pending resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I have gone through that in detail and I have said repeatedly——

Mr. RUSSELL. I was detained and did not hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have said repeatedly that I did not concede, and do not believe, that the terms of the Root formula nullify or impair reservation 5. I could say it over and over every time anyone wishes to have me do so, but I have said also that there are some who do not agree with that position, but who hold, in view of the terms and conditions attached, that the Court may, in spite of objection on the part of the United States, consider a question and render an advisory opinion touching a subject in which the United States asserts an interest. In order to relieve from that doubt, a doubt which I do not entertain, but which others entertain, the committee have incorporated in the resolution a provision reaffirming in the exact language of reservation 5 that the Court shall not in the end, over the objection of the United States, entertain a request for an advisory opinion touching a subject or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

I think I have made myself clear. I have attempted to do so. Great lawyers outside this body have, as a rule, accepted the principle and interpretation announced by Mr. Root. The bar associations which have considered the subject have done that. But I say that, even granting there may be grounds for the contention that there is ambiguity in the matter, such ambiguity disappears when we reaffirm in its exact language the second part of the fifth reservation.

Probably no subject has been so clouded by misunderstanding as the proposal that the United States accept membership in the World Court. The advocates in some instances have claimed more advantages to the American public than reasonably can be expected, while some of the opponents have conjured up in their imagination disastrous results which cannot follow participation by the United States as a member of the tribunal. Admitting that many acute differences between nations may not be submitted to the Court for decision, there are still numerous issues arising from time to time which sound policy justifies shall be referred to judicial process for settlement.

Arbitral commissions have accomplished wholesome results, and it is believed that they will continue to do so. Nevertheless, experience has shown their inadequacy to adjudicate classes of cases arising between governments which are more appropriately referable to agencies, such as the World Court, charged with the application of international law according to standards of impartiality and justice.

Since the jurisdiction of the Court is limited to cases which the parties refer to it, save in the four classes of cases in which they may bind themselves in advance to recognize compulsory jurisdiction, there can be no basis for the assertion repeatedly made by the opponents of the Court that this Government compromises its sovereignty or sacrifices its independence in joining the Court. It is not proposed in the resolution of adherence that jurisdiction be conferred. After we have joined, the Court can take cognizance of no dispute or controversy in which our interests are involved except with the consent and approval of the United States.

There is a provision in the statute which authorizes any State to recognize as compulsory the jurisdiction of the Court in cases involving the interpretation of a treaty, a question of international law, the existence of any facts constituting a breach of an international agreement, or the nature and extent of the reparations to be made for such breach. But it is not proposed that the United States shall agree to this provision. It is expressly provided that we do not agree. Therefore the Court cannot take cognizance of any dispute to which the United States is a party unless the Government of the United States agrees it shall do so. This is true as to disputed cases and advisory opinions.

Were it not the express provision of the World Court statute that the Court's jurisdiction is confined to cases which the parties to disputes may refer to it, the same rule would apply. There is no power in one nation to bring, by judicial process, another nation against its consent into any court or tribunal for the determination of any issue or question. If the rule had not been expressly laid down in the statute, it would be the same and would have had equal force and effect.

The sole specific obligation which will result from our adherence pertains to the payment by the United States of a share of the Court expenses. The five reservations which the Senate made when it gave its consent on January 27, 1926, have already been fully discussed, at least as fully as I propose to consider them at this time.

The assertion has been made, since the United States may now avail itself of the Court's procedure without becoming a member, it is unnecessary for the United States to adhere to the protocol. It is said we are entitled to take cases before the Court and there is nothing further for us to gain.

It is a fact that under article 35 of the statute this Government is given the right to avail itself of the services of the Court, and in this sense we shall secure no greater right by adhering to the protocol and statute of the Court. But this contention merits designation as the sponger argument. It is within our power to retain the prerogative of a sponger, but who desires that the United States shall be a parasitical dependent? The sense of responsibility of our citizens has not sunk to such a low level that they are willing to avail themselves of the benefits of a tribunal set up by other nations and at the same time deny that tribunal moral and financial support.

It is well to remember that the right which we now possess of recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the judicial settlement of international differences is not one of the so-called "natural rights." The right of recourse to this Court is only because of the organized efforts of others. If we do not choose to associate ourselves with the other nations in the effort to maintain this Court and make it a vital institution for good in the international affairs of mankind, we must not be surprised if others despair of the effort. If and when such a time should arrive and this institution and the principle upon which it is founded lose the united support of the nations, the sponger must be prepared to assume weighty responsibility.

Not only that, but when the right of recourse to such a Court shall not exist, most important of all the will to do so will be lacking. The will to make use of the judicial machinery for the settlement of international differences can be created and maintained only by the continuous cooperation of all the nations. The United States is an influential member of the community of nations, and it is necessary for it to adhere to the World Court if it desires to place its influence behind the principle upon which the Court has been established and maintained.

The United States has played a prominent part in the promotion of the World Court idea—the idea of a court to which nations may take their disputes for judicial settlement. We have encouraged the adjustment of international controversies by pacific methods. We were among the first to propose the establishment of a true international court which would provide a more adequate instrument to this end.

As early as 1899 President McKinley charged the American delegates to the First Hague Conference to act upon—

> The long-continued and wide-spread interest among the people of the United States in the establishment of an international court.

Both at the First and at the Second Hague Conferences the American delegates proposed a plan for the establishment of a permanent international court. The delegates to the second conference were instructed by President Theodore Roosevelt to work for the development of the Permanent Court of Arbitration established by the First Hague Conference—

> Into a permanent tribunal composed of judges who are judicial officers and nothing else, who are paid adequate salaries, who have no other occupation, and who will devote their entire time to the trial and decision of international causes by judicial methods and under a sense of judicial responsibility.

In 1922 such a court was established. It has functioned for more than 12 years; and, in spite of efforts to detract from its effectiveness and usefulness, it has made a record for impartiality and justice which commends it to the consideration of those devoted to pursuits of peace.

It is, therefore, decidedly to the self-interest of this Nation to encourage and support the work of a judicial tribunal before which the undertakings of nations, when in dispute, may be taken for determination. It is possible to make technical and other criticisms; it is possible to find fault with the power and its exercise by the Court; but those who believe that in the progress of mankind intelligent efforts should be cooperated and coordinated for the substitution of lawful authority for force should not content themselves with making technical objections to our accepting membership in this tribunal. They owe it to themselves, to their country, and to the civilization of which they are a part, to contribute something substantial to the advancement of the cause of peace.

Before this debate shall be concluded I expect that such proposals as have been made by Senators to make provision for the creation of another court to take the place of the World Court will be brought to the attention of the Senate and discussed. When that shall be done you will be surprised and rejoiced at the thoughtfulness, the tolerance, the impartiality which underlies the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice; and you will be equally surprised that great minds glorified here have demonstrated their incapacity to devise any plan comparable in its possible advantages and benefits to those of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I had intended to present an amendment to the pending resolution of adherence providing that so long as any member of the Court is indebted to the United States, the United States shall not become a member; but if I am in error in my draft of the amendment, I merely give notice that I reserve the right to present it in the future if I should see fit to do so.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business on the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator call for a quorum after the executive business is finished, in order that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] may be present?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I will see that that is done.

Mr. NYE entered the Chamber.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—ANNING S. PRALL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Anning S. Prall, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the unexpired term of 1 year from July 1, 1934.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That completes the calendar.

AMENDMENT TO WORLD COURT RESOLUTION OF ADHERENCE

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution of adherence on the part of the United States to the protocol of signature of the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate resume legislative session.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Coolidge | King | Radcliffe |
| Ashurst | Copeland | La Follette | Reynolds |
| Austin | Costigan | Lewis | Robinson |
| Bachman | Couzens | Logan | Russell |
| Bailey | Cutting | Lonergan | Schall |
| Bankhead | Davis | Long | Schwellenbach |
| Barkley | Dickinson | McCarran | Sheppard |
| Bilbo | Dieterich | McGill | Shipstead |
| Black | Donahey | McNary | Smith |
| Bone | Duffy | Maloney | Steiwer |
| Borah | Fletcher | Metcalf | Thomas, Okla. |
| Brown | Gerry | Minton | Thomas, Utah |
| Bulkley | Glass | Moore | Townsend |
| Bulow | Gore | Murphy | Trammell |
| Burke | Hale | Murray | Truman |
| Byrd | Harrison | Neely | Vandenberg |
| Byrnes | Hastings | Norris | Van Nuys |
| Capper | Hatch | Nye | Wagner |
| Caraway | Hayden | O'Mahoney | Walsh |
| Clark | Johnson | Pittman | Wheeler |
| Connally | Keyes | Pope | White |

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of certain Senators as announced by me this morning, and ask that this statement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, OF COLORADO

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a well-deserved tribute to the public record and services of Congressman EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, appeared in the Washington Daily News of Thursday, January 10, 1935. The author is the well-known and gifted Washington newspaper correspondent, George Sanford Holmes. The occasion for the tribute is so unusual, and Colorado's pride in the long and honorable career of Congressman TAYLOR is so genuine and State-wide, that it is highly appropriate to ask, as I do, the incorporation of the article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Congressman TAYLOR and Speaker BYRNS, of Tennessee, are contemporaneously the oldest Members of the House of Representatives, tested by years of consecutive service in that honorable body. They have both concluded 26 years of official service, and each of them has recently begun his fourteenth term in Congress. Congressman BYRNS, of course, has recently joined the long line of noted Speakers, and, in the absence of Congressman BANKHEAD, of Alabama, Congressman TAYLOR is acting majority leader in the House of Representatives. In Mr. Holmes' article will be found reference not only to Congressman TAYLOR's prolonged public activities and special helpfulness to the West but also to the picturesqueness and remarkable natural resources of the mountain empire he has faithfully represented for the better part of a generation.

I ask that the tribute to Congressman TAYLOR, of Colorado, be printed at the conclusion and as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News, Jan. 10, 1935]

EDWARD T. TAYLOR, OF COLORADO

By George Sanford Holmes

Only 2 men are left in the House out of 86 who entered in the Sixty-first Congress 26 years ago. These two survivors, however, occupy today the two most important positions in the House. One is JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennessee, new Speaker. The other is EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, acting majority leader in the absence of WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, who is ill.

BYRNS and TAYLOR are beginning their fourteenth consecutive terms. In continuous service they are outranked only by ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois, who is in his fifteenth consecutive term.

Representative TAYLOR is the oldest of these three. Tall, erect as an arrow, immaculately dressed, alert in movement and countenance, he would pass for 60. He is 76.

HEADS PARTY CAUCUS

But for his years TAYLOR would have been active in the race for the Speakership or leadership. He was content to be chosen chairman of the Democratic House caucus and retain his vice chairmanship of the House Appropriations Committee and chairmanship of that body's subcommittee on Interior Department appropriations. On Congress' opening day illness prevented BANKHEAD from attending, and TAYLOR, as caucus chairman, functioned in his place. When it became apparent that BANKHEAD's absence might be protracted, TAYLOR was chosen to act in his stead. The choice has proved popular.

It is said of TAYLOR that he has served more than a quarter of a century in the House and never made an enemy. He has never been self-assertive or contentious, but he has an impressive record of legislative accomplishment, particularly with reference to the West.

SAVED BOULDER DAM

He was born in Illinois, but has lived in Colorado since 1881. He was a successful attorney in Glenwood Springs when elected to the House at 50. In Congress he has been as responsible as any one individual for the growth of reclamation, the national park service, the forestry service, and other Federal activities in behalf of orderly development of the public domain.

Twice he saved the Boulder Dam Act from defeat, leaving a sick bed on two occasions to break a House tie. He was an important factor in the successful outcome of the Colorado River Compact, which made Boulder Dam possible, and supported proposals to develop Muscle Shoals as a Government enterprise. He sponsored the important Taylor Grazing Act, adopted last session, which is aimed at preserving the remaining unappropriated Federal reserves from despoliation by predatory cattle interests.

SERVES VAST DISTRICT

His activity in the cause of western development accounts for the fact that he is widely known in the West but little known east of the Mississippi.

Taylor is married and has three children. He takes little part in social activities.

Several Eastern States could be dropped into his Colorado district. His home is in Garfield County, which is 120 miles long and 75 miles wide. In his district are to be found almost illimitable oil shale deposits which will some day furnish the Nation's oil supply; some of the most celebrated gold towns of the mining era, including Leadville; immense forest reservations; the fountainheads of 8 large rivers, and 40 mountain peaks each of which is more than 14,000 feet in height.

No man in Congress, probably, has done more to preserve the natural resources not merely of this district but of the entire West.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, appointed the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] as members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to visit the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, with additional activities to December 1, 1934, and also transmitting a statement showing the names and compensation of the members and employees of the Commission, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, favoring the Federal regulation of milk produced in other States and marketed within the State of New York under similar regulations applied by the State to milk produced within its borders, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WAGNER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, memorializing Congress to enact legislation for the control and eradication of field bindweed, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. NORRIS.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, memorializing Congress to consider legislation looking to either taking all profits out of war or putting the business of the manufacturing of munitions of war solely in the hands of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WAGNER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Assembly of the State of New York, memorializing Congress to take appropriate action designating Floyd Bennett Field Airport in Brooklyn, N. Y., as an air-mail service station for New York City and environs, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WAGNER.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Surety National Farm Loan Association, of Dodge, Nebr., favoring a permanent rate of 4-percent interest on farm mortgages made through the Federal Farm Credit System and a thorough investigation of the meat-packing business to bring about an equitable readjustment in the livestock industry as it affects the producer and consumer, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Surety National Farm Loan Association, of Dodge, Nebr., favoring the enactment of legislation to retrieve from private owners the power of coining and regulating money, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Somerset, Pa., by the State convention of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, favoring the registration of all aliens and the deportation of those failing within 90 days therefrom to declare their intention of citizenship, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the State convention of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Somerset, Pa., protesting against any change in the jurisdiction of cases relating to aliens who believe in communism or anarchy, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the immediate payment of World War veterans' adjusted-service certificates, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Vincent Jos. Klus, of New York, N. Y., praying for the immediate payment of World War veterans' adjusted-service certificates, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROBINSON. On behalf of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is necessarily absent on the business of the Senate, I ask to present voluminous petitions requesting that the testimony taken and the report of the Federal Communications Commission relating to broadcasting be published at Government expense.

(The petitions presented by Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) are from numerous citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the publication at Government expense of all testimony taken by the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcast Division, in relation to broadcasting of programs of interest, convenience, and necessity, together with the report of the Commission.)

Mr. BORAH. I desire to offer petitions relating to the same subject as those presented by the Senator from Arkansas, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. May we have them read, Mr. President?

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

(The petitions presented by Mr. BORAH are from numerous citizens of the State of Idaho, praying for the publication at Government expense of all testimony taken by the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcast Division, in relation to the broadcasting of programs of interest, convenience, and necessity, together with the report of the Commission.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Arkansas on behalf of the Senator from Maryland and those presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Does the Senator from Nebraska insist upon the reading?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Nebraska, as I understand, was making a humorous allusion in view of the volume of the petitions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if they have gone to the Committee on Interstate Commerce that is satisfactory, for that will make the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] read them, and I think that will be just as good.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have received petitions containing the signatures of 64,467 persons, and I present and ask unanimous consent to have the body of one of the petitions inserted in the RECORD and the petitions themselves referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the body thereof was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States of America, greetings:

In obedience to the mandate of the Seventy-third Congress, second session, the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcast Division, has taken the testimony of many witnesses in relation to the broadcasting of programs of public interest, convenience, and necessity. We are deeply interested in these facts and therefore petition Congress to publish all the testimony and the report of the Commission, at Government expense, and mail to each of us, the undersigned, a copy thereof.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I present petitions signed by some 20,000 or more persons in the State of Pennsylvania asking Congress to publish a report of the Federal Communications Commission based on testimony taken under authority of a resolution adopted by the Seventy-third Congress relating to the broadcast of programs. I ask that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

It is necessary to take this means of acknowledgment because my office force is not sufficiently large to cope with this correspondence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WAGNER presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN SENATE,
Albany, January 8, 1935.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 15 (by Mr. Berg)

Whereas, by the testimony before the United States Senate Committee on munitions of war, it was revealed in hearings before it, that while the youth and manhood of the United States were patriotically offering their limbs and lives during the late World War at $1 a day, manufacturers of munitions of war in this country made a profit of over 1,000,000 percent on their investment; and

Whereas, when the bugle sounds the call of war, the young, the strong, the very strength of our Nation rally to the defense of our starry standard. They constitute the very future of our fruitful and unselfish labor. They offer to go down into the silence of the dirt in order that our institutions may be perpetuated. Their services are real, genuine, and unselfish; and

Whereas manufacturers of munitions, against the best interests of the citizens of our country, have been wont to sell and transport to foreign countries munitions of war, poison gases, and other death-dealing devices solely and purely for profit despite the fact that these instruments of death may be used against our own soldiers in the event of war between us and such foreign country; and

Whereas the sale of munitions by American manufacturers to such countries should be under the sole control of the Government of the United States so as to eliminate that type of salesmanship, employed by munitions manufacturers, which creates fears and visions of impending danger of war, thus forming among the peoples of the world intense distrust, hatred, and war fever in a gigantically organized propaganda, born of a desire by these manufacturers to establish markets for their munitions: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York hereby memorializes the United States Congress to consider legislation looking to either taking all profits out of war or putting the business of manufacturing munitions of war solely in the hands of the United States Government.

By order of the senate.

JAMES J. REILLY, Clerk.

In assembly, January 9, 1535, concurred in without amendment.

By order of the assembly.

HOMER W. STOREY, Clerk.

Mr. WAGNER also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN SENATE,
Albany, January 8, 1935.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 16 (by Mr. Stokes)

Whereas the health, welfare, and prosperity of this State depends in a large measure upon the dairy industry; and

Whereas this State has established certain regulations pertaining to the production, sale, and distribution of milk within the State, which regulations are designed to aid the dairy farmer, stabilize the dairy industry, and assure to the consumers a continuous and ample supply of wholesome milk; and

Whereas a part of the milk supplied to consumers in this State is produced and sold in adjoining States and for this reason the cooperation and assistance of the Federal Government is essential so that interstate shipments may be regulated, in fairness to producers and consumers in this State, in conformance with the conditions imposed within this State by State authority: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States be, and hereby is, requested to supplement the regulations made by this State pertaining to the production, handling, and marketing of milk within the State by making effective at the earliest possible date such Federal regulations as will place milk produced in other States and marketed within the State of New York under similar regulations to those applied by this State to milk produced within its borders; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to each Member of the Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

JAMES J. REILLY, Clerk.

In assembly, January 9, 1935, concurred in without amendment.

By order of the assembly.

HOMER W. STOREY, Clerk.

Mr. WAGNER also presented the following resolution of the Assembly of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, January 8, 1935.

By Mr. E. S. Moran

Whereas the Floyd Bennett Field Airport in the Borough of Brooklyn, county of Kings, State of New York, by reason of its readily accessible location and excellent facilities, is one of the finest equipped airports in the world; and

Whereas such airport has been established at very considerable expense to the city of New York; and

Whereas it is in the interest of the United States Government and the government of the city of New York that the excellent advantages of such airport be utilized to the fullest extent by the United States Air Mail Service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Congress of the United States and the Postmaster General of the United States be, and hereby are, respectfully memorialized to take appropriate action to the end that the Floyd Bennett Field Airport in the Borough of Brooklyn, State of New York, be designated as an Air Mail Service station for the city of New York and the environs of such city; and be it further

Resolved (if the senate concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Senate, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of New York, and to the Postmaster General of the United States.

By order of the assembly.

HOMER W. STOREY, Clerk.

Mr. WAGNER also presented resolutions of the Unit of Rockville Centre Post, No. 303, American Legion Auxiliary, in the State of New York, favoring the establishment and maintenance with proper care at appropriate points in the United States of suitable cemeteries for the burial of deceased war veterans, and also the making of Armistice Day a national holiday, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Liberal, Kans., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NORRIS presented a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

RESOLUTION MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO ENACT FEDERAL LEGISLATION FOR THE CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FIELD BINDWEED

Whereas the Forty-ninth Session of the Nebraska State Legislature passed and approved a bill to provide for the control and eradication of field bindweed (Convolvulus arvensis), in which was prescribed the duties of certain county and State officers with respect thereto in article 14, Compiled Statutes Supplement, 1933, chapter 2, Session Laws of Nebraska, 1933; and

Whereas the eradication of the field bindweed, which has become common on Nebraska farms, is a question which requires Federal assistance and cooperation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives in fiftieth session assembled—

1. That this house respectfully petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States forthwith to provide effective assistance by the Federal Government to control and eradicate field bindweed.

2. That the clerk of this house be directed forthwith to forward copies of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and to the several Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the National Congress, as well as to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to the end that necessary remedial and beneficial laws with respect to the control of field bindweed be enacted for the benefit of agriculture in Nebraska and neighboring States.

Mr. COPELAND. I present resolutions relating to pending measures and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM,
New York, January 10, 1935.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,
The Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR COPELAND: At the meeting of the New York State Board of Directors of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we reaffirm our desire, so often enunciated in the past, that the United States join the World Court immediately."

Permit us to urge you to help in every way possible to secure our early adherence to the World Court.

At the same meeting the following resolution was also adopted:

"Resolved, That we urge the immediate passage of an anti-lynching bill, so that our country may no longer be disgraced by lawless mob murders."

We feel sure that your kind heart will make you do exactly what we urge and that you will use your utmost power to secure the speedy passage of a bill that will make lynching impossible in the future.

Very cordially yours,

KATHERINE D. BLAKE,
Acting Chairman.
LYN SMITH,
Executive Secretary.

Mr. COPELAND also presented resolutions adopted by Young Emmet Council, of Yonkers, and Padraic Pearse Council, of Rochester, of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, in the State of New York, protesting against certain alleged utterances of Hon. Robert W. Bingham, American Ambassador at London, and favoring a policy of "no entangling alliances", which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SEED AND FEED, ETC., IN MINNESOTA

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD two resolutions sent me from Marshall County, Minn., by the agricultural drought committee and the board of county commissioners of that county. The purpose of the resolutions is to call attention to the fact that this particular county has been taken off from the relief roll, although the western part of it is equally as badly off as is the county to the west of there, Walsh County of North Dakota, designated as an emergency county. The resolutions ask for seed and feed and are directed especially to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, urging it to declare this particular county an emergency county; and I ask that these resolutions be sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for such action as it can take in the circumstances.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WARREN, MINN., January 11, 1935.

Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You will find enclosed a copy of a resolution to Mr. R. C. McChord, Acting Director Drought Relief Service, which has been forwarded to him.

Would you please continue in your efforts toward getting Marshall County designated as a primary emergency county?

Yours very truly,

R. A. REIERSON,
Agricultural Extension Agent, Marshall County.

---

THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF MARSHALL COUNTY,
Warren, Minn.

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

"R. C. MCCHORD,
"Acting Director Drought Relief Service,
"Washington, D. C.:

"On January 1, 1935, the issuance of orders for feed relief by the S. E. R. A. was discontinued in this county, leaving many of our farmers without means of obtaining feed for their livestock.

"Drought has been very severe in western Marshall County during the year of 1934. Many fields were abandoned. Pastures were dried out. Farmers were compelled to start feeding their livestock during the months of July and August. Because of this, many now find themselves entirely without feed and forage, and also without funds or credit with which to purchase these commodities.

"Added to the damage done by drought, ravages of the hail storms of July 1 and subsequent dates did much damage in certain areas of this county, destroying several hundred square miles of crops.

"The problem of obtaining feed and seed is a situation which our farmers cannot meet unless some assistance is given them in the form of feed and seed loans. Feed must be shipped into the county. Unless this is done many head of livestock will perish from starvation before spring. Foundation herds will have to be disposed of at prices which in many cases will hardly pay transportation costs. The human relief load will be increased because their means of livelihood will be taken away from them.

"We have in our county a committee designated as a 'county agricultural drought committee', which in a primary emergency drought county passes on F. C. A. loans for feed and seed. This committee finds itself severely handicapped because this county has not as yet been designated as an emergency drought county. It cannot therefore function in giving assistance to the many worthy cases which have appealed to it for feed relief.

"Western Marshall County's condition is just as serious as the condition in Walsh County, N. Dak., just across the State boundary line and which has been an emergency county for some time.

"Now, therefore, be it resolved, that we, the county board of commissioners of Marshall County, Minn., respectfully petition the designation committee of the drought section, A. A. A., to act at once to designate western Marshall County, Minn., as a primary drought county, in order that feed and seed loans may be made to worthy farmers of this county by the F. C. A. upon the recommendation of the county agricultural drought committee."

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion and the same being put, was unanimously adopted.

C. J. JOHNSON,
Chairman County Board.

Dated January 9, 1935.

WARREN, MINN., January 11, 1935.

Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You will find enclosed a copy of a resolution adopted at a meeting held by the county agricultural drought committee petitioning the Agricultural Drought Service, to designate this county as an emergency drought county. The original has been sent to R. C. McChord. This petition was signed by all members present at the meeting who represent various localities in this county.

Very truly yours,

R. A. REIERSON,
Agricultural Extension Agent, Marshall County.

---

AGRICULTURAL DROUGHT COMMITTEE OF MARSHALL COUNTY,
Warren, Minn., January 10, 1935.

R. C. MCCHORD,
Acting Director Drought Relief Service, Washington, D. C.:

The issuance of orders for feed relief was discontinued in Marshall County on January 1, 1935, leaving many farmers without means of obtaining feed for their livestock.

Nineteen hundred and thirty-four has been a very severe drought year for western Marshall County. Where the population resides crops of feed and forage were far below normal. Fields were abandoned and pastures and meadows were dried out. Farmers were compelled to start feeding their supply of winter forage and feed in July and August, leaving farmers without adequate winter supplies. They now find themselves without feed or forage for their livestock and also without funds or credit with which they can purchase these commodities.

Added to this, the question of supplies confronts these men. The S. E. R. A. of the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota have purchased any feed or forage which has been offered for sale in the eastern part of this county, shipping those commodities to areas designated as emergency drought counties, depleting the supply so that feed and forage must be shipped back into this county. These are problems which our farmers cannot meet unless some assistance is given them in the form of feed and seed loans. Unless this is done livestock will die from starvation before spring. Foundation herds will have to be sold and the human relief load will be increased because their livelihood will be taken from them.

The county drought committee of this county finds itself without any means of furnishing assistance to worthy farmers asking relief. Unless Marshall County is designated as a primary drought county and feed and seed loans can be made available this committee cannot function as it was intended to: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the undersigned farmers, assembled at a meeting called by the drought committee, respectfully petition the designation committee of the Drought Relief Service of the A. A. A. to designate Marshall County as a primary drought county in order that feed and seed loans can be made to worthy farmers through the F. C. A., upon the recommendation of the agricultural drought committee of Marshall County.

Respectfully submitted.

Signed by members attending meeting.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT CLERKS TO SENATORS

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 39) authorizing the appointment of additional assistant clerks to certain Senators, reported it with an amendment.

BLANCHE A. HALL

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 26, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1934, to Blanche A. Hall, daughter of William L. Walling, late an employee of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ELIZA J. SELLERS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I also report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 19, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 19) submitted by Mr. DAVIS on January 7, 1935, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1934, to Eliza J. Sellers, widow of James F. Sellers, late messenger at the card door of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ELIZABETH TENNER

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I also report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 16 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 16) submitted by Mr. BANKHEAD on January 7, 1935, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1934, to Elizabeth Tenner, mother of Zelda Tenner, late an assistant clerk in the office of Senator BANKHEAD, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate she was receiving by law at the time of her death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 33) providing that it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to any country violating the terms of the pact of Paris arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war, or to make any such trade or financial arrangements with the violating country or its nationals as in the judgment of the President may be used to strengthen or maintain the violation; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF A BILL

Mr. COPELAND. Inadvertently the other day in introducing bills I included one which I did not intend to present to the Senate at this time. I ask unanimous consent therefore that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill referred to, namely, the bill (S. 10) to amend the penal laws of the United States, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, as to the Senate bill 345, to repeal Government-wage cuts as of January 1, 1935, and for other purposes, and Senate bill 346, to restore the basic rate of compensation of Federal officers and employees, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service, that committee took action this morning to the effect that they had no jurisdiction to determine as to these measures. I therefore move, with the consent of the Senate, that the Committee on Civil Service be discharged from the further consideration of the bills mentioned and that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, a few days ago I introduced Senate bill 230, a bill to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 by including the Cumberland River and its basin within the provisions of the act, and for other purposes. By inadvertence, the bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I have advised with the chairman of that committee, and he has no objection to the request I am about to make. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 26, to prohibit the shipment in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and the products of petroleum produced in contravention of State laws, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, has the Senator consulted the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] with reference to withdrawing the joint resolution from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know in whose jurisdiction the matter is.

Mr. GORE. It is a joint resolution that I introduced on the subject of "hot oil."

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection; but since the measure has been referred to the Committee on Finance, I think the Senator from Oklahoma should consult the chairman of that committee before he withdraws the joint resolution from the committee.

Mr. GORE. The chairman is not present, and I have ascertained that the Committee on Mines and Mining is to take up on Thursday the bill introduced by the Senator from Texas. Since that committee is to consider the subject, I thought all measures on the subject should be before the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none.

ACCEPTANCE OF STATUES OF CAESAR RODNEY AND JOHN M. CLAYTON

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) was read, considered, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statues of Caesar Rodney and John M. Clayton, presented by the State of Delaware and placed in Statuary Hall, are accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statues of two of its most eminent citizens whose names are so thoroughly identified with the State and Nation.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions suitably engrossed and duly authenticated be transmitted to the Governor of Delaware.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS IN CONNECTION WITH UNVEILING OF STATUES OF CAESAR RODNEY AND JOHN M. CLAYTON

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, with illustrations, and bound, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 3,500 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in the rotunda of the Capitol, and such other matter as may be relevant thereto, upon the acceptance of the statues of Caesar Rodney and John M. Clayton, presented by the State of Delaware, of which 500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,150 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,850 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Delaware.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 47), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION

Mr. COOLIDGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 48), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

FINANCING AND PROPOSED REORGANIZATION OF MAYFLOWER HOTEL

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 49), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 231, Seventy-third Congress, second session, agreed to June 13, 1934, is hereby continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and the limit of expenditures to be made under authority of such resolution is hereby increased by $1,000.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 50), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is authorized to appoint one additional clerk to serve until the expiration of the present session of the Congress, and to be paid a salary at the rate of $1,800 per annum out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. SMITH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 51), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any sessions or recesses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 52), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per one hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 53), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during sessions or recesses of the Senate.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE KELLOGG PEACE PACT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this is the sixth anniversary of the ratification of the Kellogg Peace Pact by the Senate of the United States. As I remember it, only one vote was cast against ratification in the Senate. In that treaty the United States, and other nations subscribing to it, agreed to use only pacific means in settling disputes and disagreements.

Yet, Mr. President, what do we find today? We find the nations of the world engaged in another mad scramble to arm themselves for the next war, in the name of self-defense.

I did not say we find other nations arming themselves, although that statement would be true. I said we find nations arming themselves—spending upwards of $5,000,000,000 a year on armaments, with the probability that more than $6,000,000,000 will be spent in the next fiscal year.

And we ourselves, a pacific nation, a nation desirous of peace, a nation suffering distressfully from the effects of our latest war, seem to be planning to lead the march to Mars, god of war. We are facing a billion-dollar budget for war purposes; 65 percent more recommended than 2 years ago.

I am opposed to this huge war program, and I intend to oppose these huge appropriations. I think they can be reduced, and the United States still have adequate forces for national defense.

In this connection I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial appearing in the Washington Post, this morning, which states the case very well, and which I fully endorse.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 15, 1935.]

ANNIVERSARY

Today is the sixth anniversary of the Senate vote approving, with just one dissenting voice, ratification of the Kellogg Pact for the renunciation of war. The second article of this treaty, now in force between nearly all the nations of the world, agrees that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

It is ironic that on this anniversary the Congress should have before it the largest peace-time budget for national defense ever presented by any American President. For the next fiscal year the upward tendency is particularly pronounced.

The military expenditure for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, was $479,694,308. The estimated military expenditure for the current fiscal year is $612,785,756. The proposed military expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1936, is $792,484,265. This represents an increase in this item of about 65 percent over President Roosevelt's first Budget, not considering possible allocations to the Army and Navy from public-works appropriations.

There will be many, particularly across the Pacific, who will note the contrast between our precept in urging the world to adopt the pact for the renunciation of war and our practice in now advocating a program of military expansion costing as much as the entire governmental budget for a normal pre-war year. And the proposed 65-percent increase in military expenses over 1934 seems additionally inconsistent by contrast with the forgotten campaign pledge of 1932: "The Democratic Party solemnly promises * * * to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government."

Three weeks ago the administration urged the country, "particularly Members of Congress", against adopting a belligerent tone in connection with the failure of the London naval negotiations. Congress can best show its appreciation of that healthy admonition by giving very critical consideration to the administration's military estimates.

THE MUNITIONS INDUSTRY

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, it seems to me quite opportune that on this day of observance of the anniversary of the ratification of the Kellogg Peace Pact some little consideration should be given to possible elements which enter into the frightful uncertainty that seems to exist in the minds of the people of this Nation at this time.

Your committee named to investigate the munitions industry, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has by resolution requested an additional appropriation of $100,000 that it might continue with the study ordered by the Senate at the last session. There is assuredly nothing unreasonable about the committee's pending request. In light of what has already been accomplished through previous appropriations for the conduct of the investigation, and in light of what remains to be done, if the study made by the committee is in any degree to be complete, I am confident that the Senate will not hesitate in affording the necessary funds.

Certain it is that the money thus far expended has brought knowledge and benefit worth many times the cost entailed. The committee has hearings scheduled for resumption on next Monday. Unless there is action by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and by the Senate affording the additional funds, which everyone anticipates are going to be available, the committee at a very early hour is going to have at least to postpone the commencement of those hearings, so that I hope there may be expedition on the part of the Committee to Audit and Control which will afford the Senate early opportunity to pass upon the request which the committee has submitted.

SECRECY SAVES FACE OF INDUSTRY

For the first time, I believe, in the history of the world the munitions industry has been subjected to searching inquiry. Facts thus far disclosed raise the question as to why and how the industry could so long escape a public study. The answer to the question is not difficult of discovery. The industry has nestled itself under the wing of the military in all lands, has made itself part and parcel, so far as it could, of the implied confidential nature of branches of government, has woven itself into the very fabric of departments of government to a degree where to seem to question it or to question its motives was treason, an effort to undermine government itself, and to cripple the national defense. In such disguise, in this air of secrecy and patriotic purpose, the munitions industry has for years—yes, for generations—gone forth with programs the countenancing of which brings lasting shame upon us and our civilization.

KINDLE FIRES OF HATE AND SUSPICION

Knowledge now of record makes difficult a cool approach to the subject of private munitions manufacture. One might approach it with less of heat and passion were it not for the fact that the industry has played with peoples and with the fate of nations as men play with checkers upon the checkerboard, moving entire nations quite at the will of an industry, an industry which finds such large profits not only in war but in preparation for war. Its kind of preparation finds it at this time enjoying greatest monetary gain when, of course, there can be kept alive the hates, the fears, and the suspicions of one another among nations and among peoples; and to keep for itself a very constant and improving market the munitions industry does not refrain from keeping the fires of hate, suspicion, and fear well kindled. Upon dark secrecy, upon appointed partnership with government, upon the fears of people, the munitions industry has thrived and continues to thrive.

Sir Basil Zaharoff until quite recently was considered a great man of mystery. Every crowned head in Europe decorated Sir Basil and honored him, as did the President of the United States, after the World War. He became the richest man in Europe.

ZAHAROFF SUCCESS NO MYSTERY

Today the mystery about him has quite vanished, and the world would like to crown him in quite another manner, for the world now knows the secret of Zaharoff's success. It knows that secret to have been that of a very ordinary salesman who discovered that by selling Greece one submarine he could on the following day sell Turkey two, and then Greece and Turkey would order more and more submarines. He extended this knowledge into other fields of munitions, selling until he had all Europe eating out of his hands and paying handsomely for that privilege. That was the secret of Sir Basil Zaharoff's success.

But was his method a secret? Hardly; for munitions makers and salesmen the world over, including ours in America, seem to be very adept in the art of arming the world against no one in particular but because others are doing it, arming the world with the same instruments of warfare for use in the name of preparedness, for use in the name of national defense.

How easy we have been, how easily we continue to be played with for the profit of munitions makers, is something to invite the anger of civilization. Yet it has not been anger that has moved your committee of the Senate in its work, nor has the committee sought to feed this justifiable anger. Rather, its goal has been the ascertainment of facts, facts called for under combination of the two resolutions introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself last February and ordered undertaken by the Senate.

NO PARTISANSHIP IN COMMITTEE

In the search for these facts no committee of Congress, Mr. President, has been more fortunate in the singleness of purpose, the singleness of direction which has moved every member of the committee and of its staff. A very difficult undertaking has been made comparatively easy by reason of this common purpose and understanding, and, as its chairman, I owe each colleague upon the committee my everlasting gratitude for his uncompromising cooperation at every turn of the work. Not once has there entered the committee consideration the ghost of partisanship to mar or embarrass the study of this problem of munition making and sale which relates, not to the welfare of one party or another, but to the welfare of all civilization.

The committee has been most fortunate in its staff of helpers. In Mr. Stephen Raushenbush, who has been largely the directing and coordinating head of the work, the committee has found talent and ability inviting our public praise. From Mr. Alger Hiss and other young men who have been associated in its large task the committee has had a helpful service that can certainly not be measured in the limited dollars of compensation which have been their reward from the limited appropriation at the committee's disposal.

That staff is quite intact today and prepared to carry on in prospect of further funds being available to complete the work. Their service at the moment without guarantee of pay is but one more of many evidences of the purpose of these men and women and their belief that the work being done is a service of large merit and may lead to blessings of unrealized proportions for humanity. For these reasons, to keep faith with these faithful, I express the hope that there will not be longer delay in compliance by the Senate with the full request of your committee so that the work may be carried on in keeping with plans carefully outlined by the committee and to the end that there may be expedition in completing the study, report made to the Senate and recommendations for remedial legislation submitted by the committee with the least possible delay.

At this time the committee is making no report to the Senate. It was united in its opinion that to make a report now would be a mistake; that it would be far better to go on and complete the study, or complete it at least in larger measure, before undertaking to report its findings to the Senate. However, should the Senate insist upon a report at this time, the committee is quite prepared and, with but a few days of notice, could, I am sure, lay before this body a report in which the large majority of that committee, if not the committee in its entirety, would concur; a report that I believe would bring rebellion within the heart of every Member of the Senate; rebellion in the thought that we have been as easy as we have been, being moved not alone in America but as nations are being moved elsewhere by men who are finding large profits in the business of war and in the business of preparing for war.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has spoken about the unity of the committee. I wish to ask him if he would not be willing to assert that the committee is equally united in the view that if anything should happen to impede or obstruct its work, or to forestall its further disclosures, the American people would be robbed of information which is utterly vital to their welfare and to the perpetuation of their peace?

Mr. NYE. Most assuredly can I concur in the Senator's thought.

The committee itself has knowledge today which has not been developed in such form as to make it available for dissemination or even for report. The committee feels that there is need for a much more complete study than has yet been made before undertaking a report to the Senate. However, when that study is complete the Senate will have a committee united in determining to lay before the Senate what I hope can constitute a textbook upon this issue of munitions making.

Just now, when members of the committee speak to the Senate, as others have, we speak as individual members of the committee, expressing perhaps some thoughts, some conclusions, that may not be concurred in by other members. As I undertake to speak my mind upon the issue this afternoon, I wish to express my appreciation and my concurrence in very large measure in the very splendid presentation which was made to the Senate a few days ago, and again yesterday, by my colleagues on the committee, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE].

TAKING PROFIT OUT OF PREPAREDNESS AND WAR

Other members of the committee are still to speak their mind upon the matter. Out of it all will come something of realization for the Senate what some limited parts of the discoveries have been.

We hope that through such individual efforts as we are making to lay our own individual thoughts before the Senate thereby we shall invite and have that continued cooperation of the Senate which will enable a sweeping, complete study to be made. Mr. President, I think no greater issue exists today than this issue involved in the study of the munitions question.

Certainly it is important to find a way to take the motive of profit out of war. Certainly it is a first call upon us to make war a less profitable thing than it seems to be. As large an issue to cope with as this, however, is that of taking profit out of preparedness for war, especially where there is found a will to profit in the name of preparedness and national defense, a will to profit, even though gaining and satisfying that will jeopardizes the peace of all the world.

A comparatively unrestrained and unrestricted industry seems to me, from the investigations thus far made, to have lost all sense of reason, to have lost all sense of balance, to have lost all sense of decency and to be running wildly, indiscriminately and roughshod over nations. It gives us an issue that challenges our best effort as investigators and as legislators.

WAR MAKES NECESSARY RECOVERY PROGRAM

We have been dealing now for a number of years with what some consider the most serious challenge that has ever confronted a nation. We have been dealing with this thing we call depression; we have been battling for what we call a national recovery program. We have been seeking to accomplish one thing—call it what we will—we have been seeking to accomplish a restored economic balance in America, a balance the destruction of which is easy to trace. We have economic wreckage upon our hands today because of 4 years of World War, 2 years of which found the United States participating. We may endeavor to trace our present-day troubles to this, that, or the other cause; but, sooner or later, there must be agreement that our troubles are traceable to war.

We should not have anticipated anything other than these troubles following that war. War has never been followed by anything other than economic distress; economic wreckage. It has never been followed by prosperity. What we have today is what has come after every war—economic wreckage—so that if today it were possible for us in this Chamber and those in the House of Representatives to accomplish the passage of legislation which would enable us tomorrow morning to reach out and grow on every farm in America, where resides a third of our population, the most bountiful crop that ever was produced and afford for that crop the best market and the finest price the farmer ever knew—if we were able to do that, and at the same time find very lucrative employment for every unemployed man and woman resident in this country today, I presume we would assume that we had again accomplished an economic balance, that we had won national recovery; at least that is the direction of our efforts; that is the outside of what we hope to accomplish. Yet, Mr. President, if it were within our power to do that, what, after all, would we have if there were left, as there would be left, a power in the hands of a few, some in America, with others scattered over the world, to lure, to coax, to bribe, and to lead this world into another war which would destroy whatever economic balance we might now restore? I repeat the question: What, then, would be the gain of all our efforts to accomplish national recovery?

Recovery constitutes, Mr. President, a challenge, indeed; and if we had had no war, we would not have the challenge which today our economic conditions present; but since we had the war it might be, just for a moment, interesting to contemplate what we might do if we had available the sum which 4 years of war cost this world.

THE COST OF THE WAR

Much has been said about it, but I think Nicholas Murray Butler, perhaps, best expressed the magnitude of the cost of war when in a report he stated that if we could have what 4 years of the World War cost we could build homes costing $2,500 apiece; build those homes on 5-acre plots of ground costing $100 an acre; furnish those homes each with a thousand dollars' worth of furniture; and give such a home to every family in Canada, in the United States, in Australia, in England, in Wales, in Ireland, in Scotland, in France, in Belgium, in Germany, and in Russia; and have considerable money left, enough so that every city of 20,000 people in all those lands could have a $5,000,000 library or hospital and a $10,000,000 university, leaving still a balance for us to spend today, a balance sufficient, if we could find a secure place for investment which would win a return of 5 percent every year, to enable us to pay salaries of a thousand dollars a year to 125,000 nurses and 125,000 more school teachers; and there would still be money left, enough money left, if you please, so that we could go into Belgium and France and possess ourselves of every penny's worth of property that existed in Belgium and France before the advent of the World War.

It was not Mr. Butler's estimate, but I might add that, possibly, there might be enough after doing all that to afford the additional money that the special committee is asking for to complete its study of the possible part played by the industry manufacturing munitions of war in leading, bribing, coaxing, cozening, and driving nations and peoples into more war.

Of course, the great cost that President Butler was estimating was only a part of the total cost of that war. At every crossroads in America today there are to be found deep, ugly scars, reminding families, reminding communities of other costs that grow out of war.

IT MUST NEVER HAPPEN AGAIN

One cannot measure, one cannot weigh these terrible costs without recalling that it was only approximately 17 years ago that the world witnessed the end of that war, when, amid the blowing of whistles and the ringing of bells, we raised our faces and our hands heavenward and gave thanks that an end had been accomplished, that after 4 years of terribleness and of wastefulness we were finished with that, and then swore with great fervor that never, never, never again must we permit a thing like that to be visited upon this earth. That was our resolve then. Today here we and generations to come are going to have to go forward packing the burden of cost growing out of that war. And yet, though that was only 16 or 17 years ago, only 17 years since the close of that war to end war, will you please observe what this world is doing today? It is finding it possible to raise more money in preparation for more war today than it ever previously raised in peace times. It is variously estimated that the world's bill for maintaining armies and navies for the present fiscal year is all the way from $6,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000. Here in America we see all too clearly, if we will see, what has been taking place in spite of our high resolve of other days.

GETTING READY FOR MORE WAR

The year before the United States went into the World War it was costing us $343,000,000 to maintain our Army and our Navy; for the present fiscal year we appropriated something more than $700,000,000 for the same purpose; now we are given the Budget for the next fiscal year, and that Budget for the Army and Navy calls for much nearer a billion dollars than the $700,000,000 which we appropriated for the current fiscal year. There seems to be no end to this madness, no end to this game of preparing, no end to this business of affording what we all like to call an "adequate national defense."

When my colleague from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was speaking last week upon the subject of the Budget for military purposes, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made inquiry as to what was the Budget for the next year. Figures were suggested covering that Budget. I should like to add that it does not make a great deal of difference how much we appropriate this year for the Army and Navy; there is not any guaranty, there is not any assurance that the amount so appropriated is going to be the limit of expenditures for the Army and Navy. The $700,000,000 which we appropriated last year was not the limit of appropriations to maintain our Army and Navy, because under our Public Works program the Army and Navy both have been reaching out and drawing freely upon the moneys which were afforded for construction in order to put men to work, to dig out of this depression, following 4 years of war.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And if the unidentified purse this year is to be $4,000,000,000, it staggers the imagination to know what the limitation upon the ultimate diversion to the Army and Navy might be.

Mr. NYE. Precisely; and I thank the Senator from Michigan for his observation.

IF OTHERS REALLY FOLLOWED OUR EXAMPLE

We like to console ourselves, we like to fool ourselves, and we do fool ourselves into saying that we are assuming these burdens and making all this preparation for more war only and solely because the rest of the world is doing it. Only because the rest of the world insists upon being a lunatic in this respect, so must we try to "keep up with the Joneses." Men with fervor declare if only Europe would follow our example, if only Japan would follow our example, we could get out from under this burden of preparedness. How we do fool ourselves!

How hard was the jolt which I suffered when, after days of belief that my country was actually in all respects the leader in the cause of world peace, I was awakened to the fact that in some respects my country was a leader, not in the cause of peace but in the cause of war. If only Europe and Japan would follow our example! My good friends in the Senate, what would be the result here today if these other lands did follow our example only Heaven can know.

It is true that every power on earth has increased its appropriations to maintain armies and navies since 1913 before the World War came. Russia, Italy, France, and Great Britain have increased their budgets all the way from 30 to 44 percent. Japan has increased approximately 140 percent her budget to maintain her armies and navies. We here in America over the same span of years have increased our budget to maintain our Army and Navy 197 percent, and yet we have the audacity to rise in our places and take time to plead, "If only the rest of the world would follow our example!"

Mr. President, in the light of that high resolve which was ours 17 years ago never to let that 4 years' experience be visited upon this earth again, it is hard to understand the trend, the direction, the course the world and we ourselves are embarked upon today. Why this mad departure from our high resolve of other days? Why these enlarged plans of preparation for more war? Why these repeated failures of disarmament conferences?

LOVE FOR PROFIT, SCORN FOR PEACE

To my way of thinking the answer is to be found in part at least, in large part, in the record which has been made by the committee investigating the munitions industries. That record reveals all too clearly, first, the tremendous love, the tremendous urge, the tremendous appeal of profit to those engaged in the manufacture of those things for which national-defense programs call. That record also clearly reveals the scorn, the downright scorn of these munitions makers for disarmament conferences or conferences having to do with an endeavor to accomplish understanding, to win a more secure peace on this earth.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has the Senator found any evidence to indicate that the munitions manufacturers have participated in disarmament conferences or endeavored to influence their deliberations in any way, and to have some control over delegates so as to make them something entirely different than disarmament conferences, as, for instance, in the case of the London Treaty or the so-called "disarmament treaty"?

Mr. NYE. There has been evidence that is now a matter of record, and it is going to be discussed at length, of the part which the munitions industry has played in driving away from the purposes which were involved in peace conferences, in disarmament conferences. It is already a matter of record how the industry put Mr. Shearer to work at Geneva in the early stages of the effort to accomplish a measure of disarmament. The record is filled today with reports from their lobbyists at Geneva and London to their masters back home telling the munitions makers that they need not worry about the outcome of that conference, that everything was well in hand, and nothing was going to be done that was going to hurt their business.

I think that record in large part answers the question why our departure from the high resolve of other days, why these enlarged war plans, why these repeated failures of disarmament conferences.

But there is another reason that ought to be stated; another reason which is to be found in the minds of the people of the world and especially the people of the United States. It is to be found in the education which seems to have become ours or at least in the belief that seems to have become ours that real prosperity can come only with war. One can go out on the corner here in Washington or back in his own community, he can talk with farmers, he can talk with laborers, he can talk with business men, he can deal with any and all classes of people, and among them he will find those who will say finally, perhaps rather thoughtlessly, but will say nevertheless, "What we need maybe to get out of this depression is another little war."

There is altogether too much of that attitude. I do not know who precisely is to blame for it; but I do know that the munitions industry does not hesitate to encourage or does not object to people entertaining that idea. They themselves assuredly do entertain it, whether they want to admit it frankly or not.

HIGH RESOLVE VANISHES WHEN PROFIT IS PROMISED

The answer to our failure to stand by the high resolve of armistice day 17 years ago perhaps is to be found in the fact that in America alone the World War created 22,000 new millionaires; 22,000 people who for the most part could not have had their profits, could not have had that great income and that wealth, except as men were willing to bleed, to die, to give their limbs, their lungs, their minds, and to leave their bodies upon foreign fields, all of which was necessary to the creation of the fortunes that were amassed by some few people compared with the many during 4 years of world war.

Mr. President, if we can find the way somehow to make for less dollar prosperity in time of war than in time of peace, we should have taken a very, very long step toward eliminating the larger dangers of more war.

Among those who enjoyed tremendous, unholy profits as the result of 4 years of war was the family of du Pont, the Du Pont Corporation. As one member of the committee, I could not help being struck by the coldness, the seeming conscienceless ness of the four members of that family, when they came and placed themselves for examination before our committee last September. It was altogether too evident that these men, like many others, were quite unaware of what they had done; were quite unaware of what they were attempting to do by reason of the practices they were pursuing in the accomplishment of larger incomes, larger business in those lines in which they are engaged in peace time as well as in war time.

FOUR HUNDRED PERCENT FOR THE DU PONTS

There was resentment on the part of that family when the committee looked with a little disfavor upon what it discovered to be the percentage of return coming to them upon their investment during 4 years of war. It was shown that 4 years of war won very large profits for the Du Ponts; that during 4 years of war they paid their executives very large salaries. In addition to that they divided among their executives in those 4 years something like $15,000,000 in bonuses, and after doing that there remained enough return upon their investment to represent a profit of over 400 percent, an average return of more than 100 percent per year.

The family resented, the company and its officials resented, any reflection upon them by reason of that profit; and they give you the impression, "Why, we are not to be questioned because of that. We earned it. It was our efficiency, it was our ability, that earned it for us. It was our service to the cause of the Allies—a very reasonable return; a very reasonable reward." One of that family, Felix du Pont, to be specific, declared as much as this before the committee:

"Why, if it had not been for the service that the Du Ponts performed for the cause of the Allies before and after the United States entered the World War, the United States today would be a German colony"; and he meant it. He was quite sincere about it. Evidently we could somehow have gotten along without the men down in the trenches, off on the battle front; but except for the service that the Du Ponts rendered we should today be a German colony!

ELECTRIC BOAT SUES GERMANY

After having this picture of fear of Germany painted, what irony there was in the discovery, on the very next day, that while the Du Ponts were most thankful that we were not a German colony, they nevertheless were quite willing to sell their specifications, their plans, their rights to manufacture this, that, and the other thing of national-defense proportions to German manufacturers, to the profit of the Du Ponts! They were not sufficiently afraid of Germany to prevent their selling anything they had in the way of a chemical device, or a munition of any kind, to those people of whom they were so fearful!

There was as much irony in that, I thought, as there was in the disclosure that after the World War the Electric Boat Co., of Groton, Conn., brought suit to recover moneys from Germany; brought suit, so to speak, against Germany, for what? To recover damages that German submarines had done to our cause during the war? No; not at all. The Electric Boat Co., of Groton, Conn., is the exclusive owner of patents used in the production of submarines. It is the exclusive private manufacturer of submarines in the United States. The Electric Boat Co. sued Germany to collect royalties on submarines which it insisted Germany had built upon patents, plans, specifications, and designs owned exclusively by the Electric Boat Co., of Groton, Conn.—irony indeed!

AN INDUSTRIAL EMPIRE BUILT WITH WAR PROFITS

The Du Ponts tell us that they are more prosperous in peace times than they are in time of war; that their profits today are greater than were their profits during the war, which is true, but not as respects percentage of return upon their investment. They are more prosperous today because of the profit that they had to invest after the war was over. Four hundred percent was their return upon their investment as a result of 4 years of war. Half of that was distributed in the form of dividends among stockholders. With the balance of their earnings they went out in 1918, 1919, and 1920, and looked for what? They looked for places where they could profitably invest this money; and as a result of the investment they made then, in those years, very largely of war profits, they today own the most titanic industrial empire that any American group has ever owned. Their control today over industry is larger than that exercised by any other single group in America.

The Du Ponts deny that it was par profits that enabled them to possess their present-day holdings industrially; but I have here an exhibit which was offered before the committee, showing the scores upon scores of corporations which the Du Ponts created, which the Du Ponts purchased after the war, in which they have invested more than $200,000,000, and in which they have won controlling interests.

Here is the General Motors Corporation, for example. The Du Pont Co. possess 23- or 24-percent ownership of the stock of that corporation in which they invested, after the war, their war-time profits.

Mr. Pierre du Pont, the senior of the family, was very resentful of any declaration as that the Du Ponts own and control the General Motors Corporation; and yet the facts are that with that 23- or 24-percent ownership in General Motors by the Du Pont corporation itself, individual members of the family, taking their war profits, also invested in General Motors stock; how largely, we do not yet know. Mr. Pierre du Pont was free to admit that he owned privately—individually—stock in General Motors. "How much?" He could not remember. "Was it not considerable?" "Well, not so considerable." "Have you not held considerable private personal interests in General Motors?" "No; nothing considerable."

When he was reminded that in 1929 he had sold $38,000,000 worth of General Motors stock that he owned, Mr. Pierre du Pont admitted that that was true. There was not any admission that that was a very vast holding, however. The facts are that between the corporation and the individual members of that family and company they do virtually own and control the greatest industry of automobile manufacturing in the world today. Their profit from these investments in the aggregate is larger in millions of dollars than was their profit during the war. They could not have had their profit of today were it not for the investment of their profits from 4 years of World War.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NYE. I do.

Mr. McCARRAN. In conjunction with the Senator's investigation, I wonder if he knows that General Motors today threatens to control the commercial air industry of this country, and today does control the commercial air industry as it exists?

Mr. NYE. I have heard something of the undertaking to control in that field; and, all things being equal, if I were called upon to wager money, with things continuing as they are, my wager would be that they would ultimately control.

The Du Ponts insist that it was not war profit that gave them their present industrial empire. John T. Flynn, one of the advisory staff of the committee making the investigation of the munitions industry, in the October 3, 1934, issue of the New Republic, quite clearly establishes just how the Du Pont Co. came into possession of its empire of today. I ask, without its reading, that that article may be printed as a part of my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New Republic, Oct. 3, 1934]

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY—THE DU PONTS ARE LESS THAN FRANK—A SUCCESSFUL REORGANIZATION—WHEN ARE WAR PROFITS NOT WAR PROFITS?

At the hearings of the Senate Committee on Munitions, Senator GERALD P. NYE sought to show that the foundation of the great Du Pont industrial empire was the profits made from the war. This Mr. Pierre du Pont flatly denied, and later Mr. Lammot du Pont energetically explained away by saying that the vast acquisitions made by the Du Pont Co. since the war were made, not out of profits, but chiefly by absorption of other companies through an exchange of stock involving no cash outlay whatever. In this I think the Messrs. du Pont were less than frank. And I shall try to prove it.

First, let me preface this with the statement made by Mr. Pierre du Pont, that at the conclusion of the war the Du Pont Co. booked its surplus as $71,000,000, and that though this was a goodly sum, it represented all that the company had to show for the so-called "vast war profits."

I shall put aside for the moment the simple arithmetical calculation that this is the sum required to pay 200,000 men in the trenches for a full year. It is not to be supposed that these 200,000 men have $71,000,000 left at the end of a year of fighting. The entire amount is consumed in caring for the families or in meeting the simple wants of the soldier himself. This $71,000,000 was what the Du Pont Co. had left, over and above all salaries, outlays, expenses, at the end of the war. If this were all, it seems to me it would be quite enough.

But the facts are something different. I beg the reader to follow these figures closely in order to see how well the carefree statements of great financiers will stand examination.

At the end of 1913 the Du Pont Co. had assets amounting to $74,816,826. Against these, however, there were outstanding bonds, preferred stock, bills payable, deferred liabilities, etc., amounting to $39,708,437. The common stock, therefore, had a valuation on the company balance sheet of $29,426,100. To this must be added the surplus of $5,682,289. Thus the free assets, the value allocated to the common stockholders, was $35,109,389.

Then came the war in Europe. The Du Ponts began to make enormous sales to the Allies. In the year before the war the net profits were $5,769,132. In 1915 they were $57,840,788. This only partly states the fact. Huge sums in cash were advanced by the Allies to the company to enable it to make plant expansions. In each year these expenditures, made out of these advances, were written off gradually.

Then in 1915 a new company was formed. I will not befuddle this account with names. The new company, which really represented only a slight change of name, bought out all the assets of the old company for $120,000,000, which it paid for in stock. When this was over the new company had the business. The old company had all the stock issued by the new company, amounting to $120,000,000.

Then the old company proceeded to call in the preferred stocks and the bonds standing against the old company. These were valued at $33,990,801. (There may be a discrepancy of a few thousand dollars in these figures.) They were exchanged for stock. After buying them up, therefore, and canceling them, the common-stock holders of the old company had for themselves $120,000,000 of stock paid to them by the new company, less the $33,990,801 paid for retiring the preferred and bonds. This left them debenture and common stock valued on the new company's balance sheet at $86,009,199.

This, then, was the first gain of the Du Pont common-stock holders. They gained in this reorganization the difference between the old $29,000,000 of common and the new $86,000,000 of common and debenture stock which they retained. I assume they continued to hold it.

At the end of the war, then, they had this $86,000,000 of common and debenture stock plus the $71,000,000 of surplus which had been piled up.

But they had a good deal more. They had the approximately $141,000,000 in cash dividends which had been declared.

In those war years they bought powder factories, chemical factories, paint and lacquer companies, and other related industries and all out of earnings. There were no exchanges of stock. Moreover, they bought a one-fourth interest in the stock of the General Motors Corporation, and this was bought with earnings. How much this is worth to the company may be seen from this simple fact. In 1929, the last big year, the dividends from the General Motors stock amounted to over half of all the earnings of all the extensive Du Pont enterprises. That stock is now carried at a book value of $147,000,000 on the company's books and in the 6 years up to and including 1929 brought into the Du Pont Co. $142,000,000 in earnings.

After the war, with this vast foundation, these huge earnings, the immense power and prestige of the company, it was able to acquire a large number of industries by an exchange of stock. But to say that they made only $71,000,000 out of war, that the swollen war profits are not the foundation of their far-flung interests of today, is to impose on the credulity and common sense of their listeners.

Mr. Irénée du Pont made another remark over and over again. He insisted that his company had made no profit out of its American war orders. It had made profits, of course, but these profits were less than the taxes the Government took back from the company during the war. Here again Mr. du Pont was less than frank. In those two war years the Du Pont Co. made enormous profits out of its sales to the Allies and to the United States Government. On those total sales it paid income taxes. It may be that the total income taxes were more than the profits made from the United States. But all the income taxes paid out were not paid on the profits made from America. If the taxes allocated to the American profits are measured against the American profits, then it will be seen that the Du Ponts did make a handsome profit out of this Government during the war. They should not be allowed to do that again.

JOHN T. FLYNN.

PATRIOTISM FOR PROFIT

Mr. NYE. I have wondered, and I am still wondering, just how large a part patriotism has played in the effort of munitions makers during the World War and since. They all, of course, will insist that their every move was prompted by a spirit of patriotism to rally to the defense of their country in the hour of its great emergency. On the basis of the record that has been made by this investigation thus far, I am prepared to say that if, in the case of some of them, it has been patriotism that moved them, that patriotism was very largely whetted by an appetite for profit—whetted by a knowledge that their "patriotism" would win large profits.

The Du Ponts may explain from day to day and from year to year this, that, and the other thing that has been developed in the record that makes a rather bad showing for them; but they never, never will be able to explain away the fact that they quibbled for long months with their Government before they responded to the demands and the requests of their Government in the very midst of war.

I have yet to find the doughboy who, when his Government asked him to get into a uniform and give his service during the war, stopped to quibble for even a minute as to what his pay was going to be; but when the Government wanted a powder plant built during the war they made their request for the building of that plant of the Du Ponts, who, they assumed, knew something about powder plants and the manufacture of powder. It was known that Government money would be utilized in building this Old Hickory powder plant. They asked the Du Ponts to undertake its construction and its operation when completed.

For more than 3 long months, in the very midst of war, the Du Ponts quibbled with the Government, with the War Department, with the Secretary of War, with the War Industries Board. For more than 3 months they denied response to the request that the Government had made of them. We have had access to the minutes of the Du Pont board of directors in that period. We have had access to the minutes and to the notations of record with the War Industries Board and with the Secretary of War. You cannot read those without knowing what it was that was occasioning the delay.

QUIBBLED ABOUT MARGIN OF PROFIT

Here, for example, is a memorandum concerning a special meeting of the War Industries Board, a memorandum signed by the secretary of that Board. I read from it:

The Secretary of War informed the Board that the Du Pont Co. had refused—

Remember, this was when we were in the midst of war—

The Secretary of War informed the Board that the Du Pont Co. had refused to undertake the building of the proposed powder plant on any other terms than those contained in their last proposition.

After our committee had battled all day trying to develop the facts in connection with this Old Hickory controversy, the committee turned to Colonel Harris, who was on the stand at the time, representative and spokesman for the War Department, not a foe of the private manufacturer of munitions at all, and asked:

Colonel Harris, was there a more critical period during the World War than this particular period in controversy?

Colonel Harris said it would be hard to declare what was the most critical hour, but he did not think there was any more critical hour than this was. The committee asked further:

To what one thing, Colonel Harris, do you attribute the delay of the Du Ponts in meeting the request of their Government during the war?

Colonel Harris said it was a difference of opinion as between the Government and the Du Pont Co. as to what the Du Pont margin of profit should be for constructing that plant, and for operating the plant for the Government after it was constructed.

SAVED OUR COUNTRY FOR US

An unadulterated quibbling over profits kept the Du Ponts for 3 months and more from responding to the wish of their Government in the very heart, the very trying time of that war. And these were the people who saved us from becoming a German province.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wonder whether the Senator will not at this point put in his remarks his conception of what he thinks would happen to a private soldier in the field who went on a strike against the Government for more salary or wages, with the enemy right in front of him.

Mr. NYE. Any soldier or any officer who had taken the attitude which the Du Ponts took during the war would not be here to explain it today.

Mr. BONE. Will the Senator just indicate what he thinks would have happened to the soldier?

Mr. NYE. He would have been tried and his life would have been taken away from him.

Mr. BONE. He would have been shot, would he not?

Mr. NYE. Of course, he would have been shot.

Mr. BONE. Shot as a traitor?

Mr. NYE. Exactly.

Mr. BONE. Let us get it in the RECORD.

Mr. NYE. It does not need to be made a matter of record that the Du Ponts are still alive and going strong today.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I rise to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether the facts he is developing do not have an important relation to the so-called "Briand-Kellogg Peace Pact", in which it was declared, in part, that war shall no longer be an instrument of national policy?

Mr. NYE. I stated in opening my remarks this afternoon that I thought this a particularly appropriate time to discuss some of the features which might be entering into the uncertainties and the dangers of war that lurk in our path in the world today.

WAR A GAME FOR PROFIT

Mr. President, it probably is true that munitions makers are not altogether responsible for the making of war, but there is altogether too much truth to the assertion that war and preparedness for war are nothing more than games, games for profit, and until we learn in some way to eliminate this profit motive we are going to be in the midst of constant turmoil and danger every hour of our lives.

BIRTH OF LIBERTY LEAGUE

Last spring one of the great American munitions makers wrote a letter in which he said that this investigation had been sponsored, had been urged, by the "reds", the radicals, people who are out to undermine the national defense and destroy the Government.

They have great fear of "reds" and of radicals. Their fears continue today, and if they spoke very clearly and frankly, they would assuredly say that the new deal is very largely the result of agitation by "reds" and radicals.

THE DU PONT INDUSTRIAL EMPIRE

One of the partners of the Du Ponts, a vice president of the Du Pont Corporation, on the 20th day of March last year received a letter from a very eminent business man, a business authority as well as one who was eminent in the political field, none other than John J. Raskob. From the files of this Du Pont vice president, Mr. Carpenter, was taken a letter which really reveals the birth of the Liberty League. Here is the letter which suggested the creation, not of the Liberty League as such but of a thing which resembles what we now have and know as the Liberty League. Mr. Raskob was trying to point out to Mr. Carpenter just what ought to be done and why he, Mr. Carpenter, ought to be the one to do it. I ask that the letter from Mr. Raskob to Mr. Carpenter be printed in the RECORD in its entirety at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMPIRE STATE,
New York City, March 20, 1934.

R. R. M. CARPENTER, Esq.,
Du Pont Building, Wilmington, Del.

DEAR RULY: In reply to your letter of March 16, which is just received, would advise that I have been entirely out of politics since July 1932, and I am anxious to keep out.

My statement at the directors' meeting was not that the people should support the President but that the people should not attack the President without knowing what they are talking about. At the time I resented the action of the United States Chamber of Commerce calling upon the President for a sound-money policy in language that would lead the people to believe that he was for some other kind of policy, particularly when a few days before he had definitely declared that two things were paramount: One was a sound-money policy and the other was the maintenance of the credit structure and good faith of the United States.

You haven't much to do, and I know of no one that could better take the lead in trying to induce the DuPont and General Motors groups, followed by other big industries, to definitely organize to protect society from the suffering which it is bound to endure if we allow communistic elements to lead the people to believe that all business men are crooks, not to be trusted, and that no one should be allowed to get rich.

There should be some very definite organization that would come out openly with some plan for educating the people to the value of encouraging people to work, encouraging people to get rich, showing the fallacy of communism in its efforts to tear down our capital structure, etc.

The reason I say that you are in a peculiarly good position to do this is that you are young enough to undertake the work, you have the time, you are wealthy enough to not have to depend upon a job or salary for a living, and are in a position to talk directly with a group that controls a larger share of industry through common-stock holdings than any other group in the United States. When I say this I mean that I believe there is no group, including the Rockefellers, the Morgans, the Mellons, or anyone else that begins to control and be responsible for as much industrially as is the Du Pont Co.

I, of course, know you won't do it, but I personally think you should, as I think it is incumbent upon all citizens to try to make this world, and particularly the country of which they are citizens, a better place in which to live. Our ancestors did it and handed down a fine form of government to us. There are very few people situated as you are.

Pierre, as a citizen, has set us a fine example, and I think you and Irénée, if you understake this job in a really big way, will find tremendous support and will be able to do one of the finest jobs that could be done for the Nation and for the future of society everywhere.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. RASKOB.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, Mr. Raskob in this letter pointed out a thing which all of us ought to be made to realize. He pointed out the importance of the Du Ponts in the present economic set-up and structure. He put it in this language:

> The reason I say that you are in a peculiarly good position to do this is that you are young enough to undertake the work, you have the time, you are wealthy enough to not have to depend upon a job or salary for a living and are in a position to talk directly with a group that controls a larger share of industry through common-stock holdings than any other group in the United States.

That is what I have said. Mr. John J. Raskob is a far better authority than I could hope to be on the rank of the Du Ponts in our present industrial structure.

Mr. Raskob proceeded to make it a little clearer as to how sweeping he considered the control industrially of the Du Ponts. Listen to this:

> When I say this, I mean that I believe there is no group, including the Rockefellers, the Morgans, the Mellons, or anyone else that begins to control and be responsible for as much industrially as is the Du Pont Co.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the able Senator from North Dakota any basis for estimating what profits the Du Ponts have reason to expect from the proposed appropriation by Congress of more than $700,000,000 in one of our coming appropriation bills for armaments and other allied expenditures?

Mr. NYE. I am sorry, I must say to the Senator, that we have no approach to it, have no idea and no ability even to assume what part of that the Du Ponts might come to enjoy.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is certain, however, is it not, that they will participate?

Mr. NYE. Assuredly they are going to participate. We cannot distribute money in this country in an industrial way and easily pick a field of endeavor where it would not be found that the Du Ponts would enjoy some part of it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from North Dakota will recall that the evidence in the hearing showed that powder of certain classifications could be made approximately 30 percent cheaper in Government arsenals than by the Du Pont Co.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Even under the figures prepared by the Du Pont Co. itself.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Yet the great bulk of the powder orders of the United States Army consistently goes to the Du Ponts.

Mr. NYE. Precisely. I thank the Senator for his comment.

We find Mr. Raskob calling the Du Ponts responsible for more industrially than any other group in America today, and they are precisely and exactly that, made so through the profits which they were permitted to garner out of 4 years of war. They could not have the empire which is theirs today industrially except as they invested in it with their war-time profits.

HOW INEVITABLE IS WAR

We call war inevitable. That is our training. Every generation has been trained to believe that war is an inevitable thing. There just is not any getting away from war. But when we note the profits which influential souls have enjoyed from war, and the profits which they enjoy from preparation for war, we are apt to begin to wonder how inevitable war really is. There was a time when witch burning was inevitable, not only inevitable but a virtuous thing, quite the thing to expect; but we long since have ceased burning witches. Possibly we have been fooling ourselves about the inevitableness of war. If war is inevitable, I have concluded that it is so primarily because the satisfaction of greed for profit is inevitable.

Assuming that the Du Pont Co. is only reflective of the general munitions industry, I would suggest that, in the event of another war, we call it, not a "war to make the world safe for democracy", but that we call it instead a war to make the world safe and profitable for "Du Pontcracy."

WAR AN INSTITUTION LAVISHLY FINANCED

Whether or not war is inevitable there must be agreement that war is very much an institution, an institution that thrives on government secrecy and aid, an institution that exploits the people on every hand, an institution that is ruthless with the fate of millions upon millions of souls in this world. No other institution is so well established, no other institution is so lavishly financed as this institution of war. Is it because of these reasons that we term war inevitable—because it is so well established, because it is so well financed?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from North Dakota, who seems to have given a great deal of consideration to many phases of the question, tell us how much of the profit which was disclosed to have been made during the period under investigation was paid to the Government in income tax, or how much was paid to the Government by means of any tax? I am anxious to ascertain how much of the profit was afterward returned to the Government by the Du Ponts, or whoever made the profit.

Mr. NYE. The committee hopes one day to be able to present a picture of how much of the total profit came back to the Government. When that time comes the Senator from Illinois is going to be disappointed to find out how small a part of it came back to the Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is there any reason known to the Senator from North Dakota, or developed by the testimony he is reviewing, why the cost of production of munitions should not be ascertained and the profit on such manufacture should not be restricted at the time when the contracts are awarded?

Mr. NYE. I am afraid the Senator does not make himself as clear as I should like to have the question. Others probably understood the question, but I am sorry to say I did not clearly hear it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the light of what the Senator has stated, is there any reason why cost-plus, allowing a definite percentage of profit, should not be made the basis of contracts allotted to the Du Ponts and other munitions makers?

Mr. NYE. If the Senator from Colorado will be patient for just a few minutes, I should like to show him what happened in the case of some of the cost-plus contracts that were engineered during the war, whereupon I am rather convinced he is going to conclude that it is exceedingly difficult to do what we want to do when we fix these cost-plus contracts.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Before the Senator leaves the question asked by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] I should like to know whether it does not already appear in the evidence that 80 percent of those war profits did go to the Federal Government in the form of taxes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The statement of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] somewhat approximates the facts so far as the profit earned by the Du Pont Co. after the United States entered the war is concerned. I think the percentage was shown to be about 69 percent. However, it had no relationship whatever to the total profits earned by the Du Pont Co. during the period of the war, and no relationship whatever to the fact that the protection of the Du Pont's right to export munitions was a great contributing cause to bringing the United States into the war.

Mr. NYE. The fact remains that with that large levy in the way of tax rates we did not come anywhere near succeeding in taking the profit out of war.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me one further statement?

Mr. NYE. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. The evidence also shows that after disbursing tremendous sums, running well into the hundreds of millions of dollars, in dividends to its stockholders during the war, the Du Pont Co. was able to buy control of the greatest manufacturer of automobiles in the whole world out of the surplus that was left over to it after the expiration of the war.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to make an observation?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. If my memory serves me right, the Du Pont Co. during the war paid and distributed to its stockholders something in excess of $255,000,000 in dividends. I think the Senator probably will recall that figure. The profits, as I also recall, amounted to 458 percent of the total assets of that corporation; and these profits were in addition to large bonuses paid the Du Ponts themselves and some of their executives.

Mr. NYE. And large salaries paid as well.

TO MAKE PEACE SECURE PREPARE FOR WAR

Mr. President, until we can find a way to take profit out of war, take profit out of preparedness for war, we shall have to live along with the uncertainty which we find on our doorstep every day. We have been taught to believe that there is only one sure way to make secure the peace of the world, and that is to be well prepared for war, "To make secure your peace prepare for war", and that in spite of the fact that for every mile of international boundary that has been adequately prepared for war and that has prevented war there can be brought into exhibition a thousand miles of international boundary that never has had any war or any threat of war, and that never has had a mounted gun upon it or a patrolling soldier upon it. Certainly preparation for war did not save other lands from the devastation and the defeat that finally was visited upon them without gain to themselves.

WHAT CONSTITUTES NATIONAL DEFENSE

It has been said that the Senate committee investigating the munitions industry is not as ardent in its championing of the cause of national defense as it might be. I wish to say that there is not one member of that committee but believes in an adequate national defense. There is not one member on that committee who would lend himself in any way to the jeopardizing of the interests of our country by failing to provide for an adequate national defense. However, there seems to be much division of opinion as to what constitutes an adequate national defense. For my own part I can conceive the United States providing an adequate national defense for far less money than is now being expended in the name of national defense. No country is so well situated to afford itself an adequate defense as is the United States and for less money than it can be procured by other countries, removed as it is by great bodies of water from those who might by any chance be our foes. Therefore, if the United States should determine to provide for an adequate national defense sufficient to repulse any foe or group of foes so foolish as to attack us, the United States would not need be approaching a billion dollars a year in the name of preparedneses and an adequacy of national defense.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. On the contemplation of national defense, I should like to submit to the Senator that if we could reach the objective at which we finally aim, and could create a system under which every resource in America would enter a common reservoir in time of war, without special privilege or compensation to anybody, but all for one and one for all, we would have made the United States absolutely invincible.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Michigan is quite right.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Before the Senator leaves that subject, may I inquire of the Senator whether he is prepared to state in what respect we could save a portion of the huge sum which we now contribute toward national defense?

Mr. NYE. I should like to depart for just a moment from what has been my set course and purpose this afternoon to remind the Senator from Delaware that the last 5 or 6 years have seen the price of a cruiser double in cost to the United States Navy. There has been no comparable increase in the cost of labor entailed in creating a ship, and one of these early days, as the committee proceeds, starting next week, to study the shipbuilding phase of its work, the Senator will, I think, become convinced that at least we have not given enough attention to the costs we have been paying in the name of national defense.

Mr. HASTINGS. What inference does the Senator draw from this condition of the cost of the cruiser having been doubled?

Mr. NYE. I will draw no inference, but will wait and let what transpires in the next week or two speak for itself.

A CASH-AND-CARRY PLAN FOR NEUTRALITY

It is easy, of course, to contemplate a strict defense that we might call an adequate national defense. But at once, assuming that we were to afford an adequacy of defense for protection against any encroachment by any foe, the question quite naturally arises: Very well, all good, but what are you going to do if and when France and Germany, for example, again engage in conflict and an American ship carrying supplies to France, flying the American flag, is spotted by the Germans out over the high seas and destroyed, carrying to the bottom the cargo, the flag, and perhaps some few American lives?" That is altogether a fair question. The question goes on: "What then will you do? Will you sit idly by, say it is too bad, but there is not anything to do about it?"

No; under existing policy, under existing habit of mind in these United States, we all know what is going to happen in that event. We are going to get in or we are going to wish that we were adequately prepared to get into that fight between France and Germany. We would want to do it because our flag had been insulted; because our rights upon the high seas had been attacked. We would do that because that has been our policy and remains our policy today. And because that is true, I am delighted to see the present administration giving consideration to the development of new neutrality policies. I hope that, among other things, that program of new policies is going to provide that it shall be unlawful for the American flag to be flown upon any cargo whose destiny is a nation engaged in war in keeping with legislation I offered in the last session. We shall not thereby be boycotting nations that are engaged in war; we shall not be declining to sell them what they may want to buy from us. We shall only be saying to them, "We will sell you anything you want, but from this time on you have got to come and get it and take it to the place where you want it; we are not going to take the chance of jeopardizing our neutrality by trying to carry it to you; we are going on the cash-and-carry, f. o. b. plan; and if you want our goods under those conditions, come and get them; otherwise get them somewhere else or do without them."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Reverting to an earlier question, under the circumstances stated by the able Senator, what becomes of the binding effect on nations, including our own, of the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact?

Mr. NYE. I should like to hear the Senator speak his own mind on what becomes of it. I am sure his mind and mine are as one upon that question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not my intention, of course, to interrupt the discussion of the Senator.

Mr. NYE. I am delighted that the Senator does so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But obviously such facts run counter to the purpose of the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact, which was to introduce a new and binding factor in the determination of national policy. If we and other nations really practiced what we preach and that pact were properly implemented and given force by public opinion, we should not again be thrust into a world conflict.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Bearing in mind what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] has said, if the Kellogg Peace Pact were properly implemented by the support of public opinion in this country as well as in other countries, it would not be necessary for the United States, 6 years after the negotiation of the Kellogg Peace Pact, to be doubling its Budget for military and naval appropriations.

A COSTLY HABIT OF MIND

Mr. NYE. Exactly. Mr. President, if we could somehow find a way to make more secure our neutrality in time of trouble between other nations, there would still be an element in this land of ours that would rise up and say, "We must not cease making plans, we must not lessen our expenditures—our increasing expenditures—because there is one potential enemy that we have to look out for; look out for this country, look out for that country." I have been in the Senate for 9 years; I have witnessed the passage of nine appropriation bills; and not one of those bills has passed without first a strong demonstration of the danger of trouble with a particular country, which we all have in mind. We have been told, "Look out for that country"; and while we are looking out for that country we go on in this mad, insane race of competition in armaments. "Look out for that country", and in that very same country its people have been educated with fervor to say, "Look out for Uncle Sam, look out for Uncle Sam", all of which has made and laid the finest foundation for a lucrative business in munitions making, a base, Senators, the like of which has never before been known in peace time. Civilization has never seen such a race as is now on between the country that we have to be "looking out for" and our own country.

For example, to bear out the point I am making, last winter Congress passed appropriation bills providing $700,000,000 for our Army and Navy for the ensuing fiscal year. Two weeks after that we were frightened and disturbed by the announcement that the country which we have "got to look out for" had just made its appropriation for the same fiscal year in the sum of $281,000,000. Whereupon we proceeded to forget that for the same year we had appropriated $700,000,000, or three times as much, and authorized the appropriation of $1,000,000,000 more in order to enlarge upon our naval preparedness—"looking out" for that country. And ever since we passed the Vinson naval-building bill the country that we have "got to look out for" has been torn by agitation; "see what the United States is doing in preparation for trouble with us"; and the people of the country that we must "look out for" eternally are being "taken for the ride" that the American people are being taken for in this mad race which I think is occasioned by nothing more than a frame of mind.

Fourteen years ago a very eminent naval authority in this country of ours wrote an article and published it in the magazine Asia, declaring that the whole danger of war between our country and the one to which I have been referring was not much more than a habit of mind. He said that there was agreement on the part of military and naval authorities on both sides of the Pacific that a war between these countries could come to nothing; that there could not be a decisive victory won on either side; that it would come to an end only when and if one or both those countries bled to death through the pocketbook; and he concluded his article by saying that the danger of war between these two countries was nothing more than an apprehensive habit of mind.

The American naval authority of whom I speak, writing that article 14 years ago, was none other than the man who is giving such large leadership to the correction of the economic ills confronting us today—Franklin D. Roosevelt. I wish we could now have from him the kind of leadership which I hope is going to be forthcoming and which is going to enable us to get away from this mad, crazy, purposeless course on which we are embarked and the building of naval armaments which are going to break our back even before we get into war.

THEY WHO ARM "FOES" CRY "LOOK OUT FOR THEM"

Mr. President, the men who cry out loudest "Look out for this country; look out for that country" are the men who are arming the various countries with implements which, it is said, are necessary for national defense. If we should come to blows with the country which we are told we have got to "look out for", resign yourselves, Senators, to the thought that when our boys move out to meet that foe they at once become the target of guns, or shrapnel, and of shell sold to our enemy by American munitions makers. That is not an exaggeration. We need but look to the figures of exportations during the last 4 or 5 years to know that there is one American industry which does not know what depression is as respects exportations. The exportations from America of munitions of war have been tremendous, and, as respects some items, the increase runs as high as six and eight and, I believe, even ten thousand percent. From our ports daily there are going cargoes of this, that, and the other kind of munitions of war whose destination is countries that we look upon or are made to look upon as our most likely foes in the event of our participation in another war.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. It is a fact, is it not, that those consignments of cargoes which could be used by possible enemy countries to kill American soldiers and sailors are not only permitted but sometimes encouraged on the part of the munitions makers by representatives of the War Department and the Navy Department of the United States?

FOES ARM FOES IN WAR

Mr. NYE. I am going to come back to that; but I want to remind the Senate of some things which were said here the other day by my colleague upon the committee from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], substantiating the statement that there is nothing unusual in this business of American munitions makers arming countries that might some day be our foes. The Senator from Missouri, in his able address before the Senate on January 10, said, among other things, that—

> When the British troops stormed the Dardanelles * * * they were fired on by Turks using guns made by a British firm financed by a French bank.

He said further:

> It has been established that French aluminum, exported to Germany through Switzerland, served to kill French soldiers and make possible Zeppelin raids on Paris and London.

The Senator went on to say:

> It has long since been proved that there existed in Switzerland during the World War rolling mills whose chief business was to remove German trade marks from steel in transit from Germany to France.

I assume the Senator meant during the war. The Senator further declared that—

> After the war Krupp, the great German munitions maker, sued in the British courts to collect from Vickers, the British armament trust, royalties for guns manufactured in England for killing German soldiers under licenses which Krupp had granted Vickers for the use of Krupp patents. Rather than go to court, Vickers settled by giving Krupp some Vickers stock.

Other examples of what was done to civilization during that 4 years of struggle can be cited. It has struck a lot of people as strange that among the institutions which seemed to be immune to the shells of opposing guns during the war were munitions makers' plants. Even those near the line somehow seemed to possess an uncanny ability to duck when a shell came their way. We know there were very few more fires and explosions in munitions plants during the war than during peace times.

We know shells went over munitions plants, went around them, reached hospitals, reached cathedrals, reached homes, found the opposing country's munition makers' property. reached the civilian population, but never or hardly ever

SAFEST PLACE IN WAR

I have had service men come to me and tell me that they were the laughing stock of their comrades because during the period of their service in France they had been stationed in the shadow of a French munition maker's plant, and that the boys all kidded them with the suggestion that there was only one safer place to be if they had to be on the front, and that safer place was under the roof of the munitions plant or within its walls.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NYE. On this specific matter, if the Senator wants to interrupt, I gladly yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want to interrupt, but I want some light. I should prefer not to interrupt, but I should like to ask a question.

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean to suggest by his words, which made upon me a strong impression of an insinuation, that the American Army or our allies did really protect the munitions works of the Central Powers?

Mr. NYE. If the Senator will allow me to finish my argument, I am going to make as clear to him as I can my own opinion regarding this matter. If he will be patient, I think he will understand why I am asking him to refrain from further interruption for the moment.

We do know that munition makers' plants were seemingly not shelled by the opposing guns. We do know that shells of opposing guns reached cathedrals and hospitals far beyond some of those plants, but they did not somehow reach the munitions plants themselves. If the Senator from North Carolina is trying to get me to say that there was collusion, that there was agreement that they would not do that to one another, I am sorry I cannot make that statement, but I have something else to say that may convince the Senator, as it has convinced me, that perhaps there is much more of truth to that than we would want there to be.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not interrupt the Senator further, but I shall be content by making the remark that if there is something in his insinuation, then we have another task and that is through the court-martial procedure of the American Army.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I fear this is a story Senators have heard too many times, that during the World War a company of youth in a small British community were organized, trained, and finally sent into Belgium and into France and took their places in line of battle. This particular company found itself in a battle, lasting for several days, with a German company, a bitter battle, a battle in which many of those British boys laid down their lives or left limbs on the field of battle, primarily because the Germans seemed to be possessed of an especially efficient gun. That battle ended only after the British had finally captured that particular gun.

MONUMENTS TO THE DEAD

The survivors of that British company thought how nice it would be, when the war was done, if they could take this gun, captured from the Germans, and place it in the square of their home town as a memorial to their comrades who had lost their lives in the battle.

When the war was over that is precisely what was done. Back to that community went that gun. It stands there today, beautifully mounted, a beautiful monument to the dead youth of that community. On one side of the barrel of that gun deeply engraved are the names of the British youth who laid down their lives before it, and on the other side there remains the engraving of the name of the British munitions maker who had manufactured and sold that gun to Germany. A beautiful monument, is it not?—and yet a splendid monument it could be if only somehow civilization could grasp the significance and the meaning of the thing.

So much business was done in supplying the French with munitions of war out of Germany and the Germans with munitions of war out of France that, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has told us, they erected steel rolling mills in Switzerland to iron out the trade marks and the names before those supplies went on to their ultimate destination. It would have been embarrassing, would it not, to have a nice new gun or a nice new piece of steel machinery turned over to the French boys during the war and have them find that it came from some German munitions plant?

FAILED TO END WAR IN A HURRY

On both sides of the line of battle for 4 years were valuable coal mines and iron mines that never once were shelled by an opposing gun. Objects far behind those mines were shelled and destroyed, but not the mines. Was there collusion; was there agreement between the two sides that they would not destroy those mines?

Senators, I never dreamed that the day would come when a high military authority would admit that there had been no effort to destroy those mines.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I inquire of the Senator whether the statement he just made is based upon evidence produced before the committee?

Mr. NYE. No; it is not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would the Senator name the officer who made that admission?

Mr. NYE. I am about to do that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Very well.

Mr. NYE. I never dreamed that the time would come when a man high in military authority in the United States or anywhere else would admit that no effort had been made to destroy those mines.

In the middle of December last I was called upon to speak at the Town Hall in New York, at which time I mentioned the ability or the seeming ability of those mines to evade destruction by opposing guns during the war.

The sponsors of that Town Hall meeting evidently thought it was time that somebody was invited to meet some of these things that were being said; and an invitation was extended to Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, now retired from the Army. On the 4th day of this month Major General Harbord went to the Town Hall in New York, and I quote his speech as reported in quotation marks from the Army and Navy Journal of January 5, 1935. Listen:

> A perspective is hard to maintain amid wild claims and counterclaims. We have even heard the argument that collusion by munitions men was indicated in the World War because the French and Germans did not fire on coal and iron fields. A little thought will throw light on that.

"A little thought will throw light on that"! Well, let us get the light. Here it is; and I continue to read as he is quoted as having declared—

> A little thought will throw light on that. Naturally each side desired to have such fields, believing it had a chance to take them for its own use—an accomplishment that would have ended the war in a hurry.

Maj. Gen. James G. Harboard therein declares that the war would have ended in a hurry if either side could have captured the mines of its opponents. Why could they not have ended the war with equal hurry by destroying those mines?

Mr. President, I have had a hard time believing that there could be foundation of fact for some of the things which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has declared, and which I have repeated today. Now I am beginning to wonder how much collusion, how much agreement there was between opposing armies, between opposing masters, determining what should be destroyed and what should not be destroyed in time of war.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator contend that the statement by Major General Harboard which he has read support the Senator's intimation that there was a refusal on the part of each army to destroy the coal mines of the other because of the munitions control over them?

Mr. NYE. No; I have not said that. It has been very freely said, however, and is being declared with great freedom in Europe today, that there was agreement not to destroy each other's munitions plants; that there was agreement not to destroy each other's mines; and now, when I see men admitting that war went on for 4 long years when it might have been ended by well-placed shells in mines, I wonder if perhaps what they are declaring over there does not have altogether too much truth—too much foundation for comfort.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wanted to know whether the Senator quoted Major General Harbord as supporting the rumor which he has heard.

Mr. NYE. No; I quoted Major General Harbord as admitting that the opposing nations did not fire upon each other's mines during 4 years of World War.

Mr. HASTINGS. But for a very definite reason; they hoped to capture them for their own good.

Mr. NYE. Yes; "to capture them for their own good"! Why should they not have destroyed them for the other fellow's harm?

Mr. HASTINGS. If they could capture them without destroying them, so that they could use them against the enemy, it seems to me that would be a good policy for an army to follow.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I did not want to interrupt the Senator; but, since he has been interrupted, I read in the papers that some metal which was controlled by a corporation composed of English stockholders—it seems to me perhaps it was nickel—was furnished by the English corporation to the opposing army from some other country. May I ask the Senator just what that metal was?

Mr. NYE. I am not prepared to advise the Senator. I could not do so. But there was nothing unusual about the exchange of materials between France and Germany during the war, it seems. We have been discussing that matter.

THE PROFITS OF WAR

Mr. President, if anyone asks the question, I say there is profit in war. There is profit in preparation for war. The profit flows most freely to those engaged in the manufacture of munitions when blood flows most freely upon the battlefield. I may shock some of you when I say that the munitions industry actually puts peoples and nations into war, and then prolongs their troubles as long as it can because of the selfish interest of profit which those companies have.

There came along the years 1916 and 1917. The Government of the United States entered into contracts with private industry to produce this, that, and the other thing needed to prosecute the war. Perhaps the Senate would be interested in knowing what happened to and for some industries as a result of awarding these contracts, some of which were on the cost-plus basis.

The year 1916 found the American Brass Co. with a net income, as related to invested capital, of 51 percent.

The 1917 profit of the Bethlehem Steel Co. was 43 percent.

Jones & Laughlin in 1917 made a profit of 47 percent.

Atlas Powder Co., 27 percent.

Colt's Patent Firearms Co., 64 percent.

Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co., 43 percent.

Savage Arms Corporation, 65 percent.

Western Cartridge Co., 35 percent.

Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 40 percent. Then, in 1919, Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation made a profit of 63 percent.

New York Shipbuilding Co., 49 percent.

Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. made, in 1917, a paltry return upon its capital investment of 86 percent!

The Bethlehem Loading Co.—shell-loading—made, in 1918, return upon its investment of 362 percent.

One could go on all afternoon and all night reciting the margins of profit which came to men and came to industries during those years.

Mr. President, I have a table for which Moody's is authority in its Analysis of Investments from 1912 to 1919, listing about a dozen American corporations manufacturing munitions. In the first column is given the average annual profit of the company during 4 years of peace preceding the war. In the second column is given the average annual profit of the same corporation during 4 years of war. I ask that the table may be printed in the RECORD in the form in which it appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

| | Average profit, 4 years— | |
|---|---|---|
| | Preceding war | During war |
| Scovill Manufacturing Co | $655,000 | $7,678,000 |
| Niles-Bement Powder | 656,000 | 6,146,000 |
| Atlas Powder Co | 485,000 | 2,374,000 |
| Hercules Powder Co | 1,271,000 | 7,430,000 |
| Republic Iron & Steel | 4,177,000 | 17,548,000 |
| International Merchant Marine | 6,690,000 | 14,229,000 |
| General Motors | 6,954,000 | 21,700,000 |
| American Smelting & Refining Co | 11,566,000 | 18,602,000 |
| Utah Copper | 5,776,000 | 21,622,000 |
| Anaconda Copper | 10,649,000 | 34,549,000 |
| United States Steel | 105,331,000 | 239,653,000 |
| Bethlehem Steel | 6,840,000 | 49,427,000 |
| Du Pont | 6,092,000 | 58,076,000 |

Authority: Moody's Analysis of Investments, 1912 to 1919.

Mr. NYE. I call to the attention of the Senate just a few facts from this table.

The average peace-time profit of the United States Steel Corporation of $105,000,000 became $239,000,000 during the war.

The average annual profit of Bethlehem Steel rose from $6,000,000 to $49,000,000.

The profit of Anaconda Copper rose from $10,000,000 to $34,000,000.

The profit of the Du Ponts rose from $6,000,000 to $58,000,000.

Profit? Indeed there is profit in this business of war and in preparing for it; and if there is any duty upon civilization today, or its representatives in legislative halls, it is that of reaching out and unmercifully destroying the last motive that may exist for profit in either war or preparation for war.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I should like to place in the RECORD at this point the statement that in September 1917, soon after we entered the war, I made a speech in this presence upon the subject "Draft Money as Well as Men"; and I joined the then Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, and Senator Thomas, of Colorado, in a minority report from the Committee on Finance recommending that we take the profits of war to pay the expenses of war as we went along. The point was made, however, that we were trying to make the war unpopular; and I think possibly it had something to do with an involuntary vacation which I enjoyed soon afterward.

Mr. NYE. I think the Senate is quite aware of what has been the experience of the Senator from Oklahoma for having, in another day, dared to take an advanced position in opposition to those who were anticipating a return to themselves by reason of the fact that men were willing and ready to go out and bleed and leave their bodies, or parts of their bodies, on fields of battle, and be returned to their homes, many of them, quite of no utility to themselves or to civilization for evermore. I think civilization owes a debt of gratitude to men like the Senator from Oklahoma and others who in that day dared to speak their minds upon an issue when it was a whole lot less popular than it is today.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has the Senate committee any information indicating how the sale of munitions to foreign countries was financed before we went into the war?

Mr. NYE. No; the committee is not prepared to make any report on that at all. No member of the committee can report in any intelligent manner upon that. The committee has a distinct and definite outline of a study to be made in that very direction before it finishes its work.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think that is very important.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for another question, has the committee reached the Paraguayan-Bolivian situation yet?

Mr. NYE. Too many times, I would say to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator intend to speak on that today?

Mr. NYE. No; I shall not speak on that at this time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator seems to be apprehensive of the world drifting into another war. Does the Senator think that his apprehension would be allayed if we joined the World Court?

Mr. NYE. I do not, Mr. President. But at the moment it seems to me that is quite aside from the question at issue. To observe how intense, to observe how unscrupulous, how insane, has become what with some is a racket, an unadulterated racket, in the name of national defense, one needs but to review some of the things which have been brought to light by the investigation.

I have prepared a list of more than 50 points which occurred to me as points of interest as developed by the investigation. I do not want to hold the Senate to the time which would be necessary to run through those, although they are all stated very briefly; and unless the Senate insists upon their being read, I shall ask unanimous consent that they may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOME FINDINGS BY INVESTIGATION

1. The investigation has revealed, of course, the giant fortunes carved by men and corporations out of war while millions died.

2. The interest which prompts the munitions makers and salesmen to prolong strife and struggle which creates a market for their wares.

3. The will to sell to both sides in a conflict, sometimes in the name and on the excuse of neutrality.

4. An amazing number of colonels, majors, admirals—men formerly in the regular military service of their country—now in the service of the munitions industry. One wonders if this serves as an example to others in the service to aspire to favor of the industry upon their retirement from service.

5. The investigation reveals American munition interests smuggling their supplies into countries in spite of embargoes.

6. That participation by our Government in international conferences does not necessarily imply that there need be or always is unanimity of action on the part of all departments of that Government.

7. That officers of our Army, notably the Chief of Staff, are alleged by the munitions people to engage in recommending American munitions in other lands where they may visit, and that they recommend improved organization and greater efficiency in foreign armies.

8. That the industry of armament-making pulls the political strings to accomplish the selection of their choices into the Consular Service.

9. That commissions are paid to foreign hands for the sale of American munitions abroad; that fortunes were paid to Sir Basil Zaharoff by American industry for his sales of American munitions of war.

10. That the American industry helped Zaharoff to escape payment of income taxes in the United States.

11. That the munitions maker looks upon peace times as lean times.

12. That Mr. Taylor, Du Pont's European representative, considers that conscription of wealth and industry retards munitions production by 6 months.

13. That the Du Ponts would sell more cheaply to other lands than to their own country if secrecy could be certain.

14. That the munitions industry when agreeing in codes of fair trade and competition makes them apply to the domestic field alone, not to their fields of foreign trade.

15. The study of your committee has shown that one member of the War Industries Board signed for the Government contracts totaling more than $49,000,000 with the Du Pont Corporation, in which he was a stockholder.

16. That existing plans for industry's part in another war leaves the chance to repeat the profit-taking of other days, and that industry would be in its accustomed position of dictating prices and terms to the Government.

17. That at least one armament maker in America was so certain of the coming World War that they gambled to the extent of millions in providing all the capacity they needed during the war, and did this as much as 5 years before the war came.

18. That the British and American submarine trusts ganged up on the South American countries, corrupting their officials, fixing prices together, and paying speakers to scare the various nations of the south into a naval race.

19. That the American and British munitions people would not let Argentina build a powder factory so it could be independent of them; that they ganged together to make that factory so costly that it could not be built.

20. That in Chile the Germans helped the British and American munitions people by putting in a dummy bid on a powder factory.

21. That it did not matter to our submarine trust if the submarines which they bribed and scared the South American people into buying were built in Europe or elsewhere; that even American naval mission officers approved orders for submarines to be built in Europe.

22. That the practice of bribery by munitions people creates a class of governmental officials who profit by leaving the munitions business uncontrolled in every respect.

23. That both British and American munitions people sneer at the efforts of foreign offices and state departments to secure disarmament.

24. That one manufacturer of gas was working with the administration of Cuba and two opposing groups at the same time. In such circumstances how can there be peace in Cuba or anywhere else in the world?

25. That the investigation has established both American gas companies trade on their official sounding names and their boasted United States Government services in an attempt to sell their wares (Federal laboratories and United States ordnance engineers).

26. That one American gas company used convicts in a South American country as experimental victims of its gases; (Chile).

27. That aircraft companies live by governmental orders.

28. That the sale of military planes to China and the training of military pilots there by Americans has given aid to one faction in China and created a market for American planes.

29. That the airplane companies are the biggest sellers of machine guns in the country.

30. That during the last war, our biggest machine-gun company (Colts) tried to lower its taxes by claiming that it had been active all over the world before the war and knew the war was coming and prepared for it.

31. That the munitions people have a reporting service which keeps them informed of the causes leading to wars far more adequately than the people at large, or even governments at times, are informed.

32. That the War Department has no figures showing the cost of supplying a purely defensive army with munitions.

33. That the munitions makers of Britain, France, and America managed to get around the Chinese embargo without too much difficulty.

34. That the financial and sales interconnections of many of the foreign munitions makers are so close that an embargo imposed by only a few nations does not hurt them—they can have their allied companies supply orders; that it was in this way that the Du Ponts got around the Chaco embargo.

35. That the munitions makers opposed embargoes by all countries as well as embargoes by the United States alone, and asked the help of the War and Navy Departments in their opposition.

36. Because of the limited investigation already made we know that an American munitions company placed men in London and Paris to send back to America scare stories about gas warfare from these two countries in order to frighten the American people into an acceptance of gas warfare as a national policy.

37. That Government appointees to the disarmament convention of 1922 were recommended and approved beforehand by the chemical industries interested in gas warfare.

38. That the munitions companies, through friendly officers in the War Department, were informed about the selection of delegates to the Geneva Conference of 1925 for a month and a half before the American people were informed about them.

39. That representatives of the War Department have described plans for the next war which amount to turning over the country to the business interests.

40. That the spirit of the munitions industry is, "This is our country, not the country of Congress", as one Du Pont man wrote.

41. That law and policy fix frightful inequality between human life and property in war—an inequality as respects the compulsion of response to government and as respects pay of service. Property won tremendous profits while men and boys fought and died for their country at a dollar a day.

42. That a high official in the industry took credit to himself for the elevation of Members of Congress to high committee posts.

43. That at least one large munitions company claimed success in securing War and Navy Department support for its fight against a proposed embargo.

44. That there was admission by one munitions maker that he was working with the administration and two groups hostile to the administration of a friendly country at the same time.

45. The investigation has brought to light the utter willingness of the munitions people to secure tariff protection for their chemical business under the claim of preparedness, but a later unwillingness to submit any portion of that chemical industry to Government control.

46. That the munitions people have a very close connection with our War and Navy Departments.

47. That the War Department plans of today call for an Army of up to 4,000,000, and its calculations for the costs of another war, costs which run into the billions, are based on the necessity of sending huge forces overseas.

48. That the committee has thus far been unable to determine the cost of munitions for a purely defensive army.

49. That the last war was a record of our Government yielding to the great industrial interests and munitions people at many points.

The committee has had testimony revealing—

50. That the greatest experiment in arms control in the world—the attempt to keep Germany and Austria unarmed—was thwarted first because of the influence of the British munitions makers with the British Government on one hand and with the German explosives companies on the other hand.

51. That after the habit of breaking the treaty was established the American and British airplane manufacturers furnished Germany with from one-third to one-half of her air force of 2,400 planes. The foreign offices and state departments of the world allowed these exports to Germany and share with the munitions people the responsibility for the menace over Europe at present.

52. That the treaty for the control of the arms traffic in 1925 was weakened by the efforts of American and European munitions makers.

53. That there is a great interwoven net of American, British, and European explosive and chemical companies. A large number of them unite in sales and price agreements and have strong governmental connections.

Mr. NYE. I do wish to state what to me are outstanding developments in one or two or three instances as respects the study we have made.

INDUSTRY BRIBES PUBLIC OFFICIALS

The committee knows today, and the Senate knows if it has given any heed to the printed hearings, that the American munitions industry—and I think ours is no different from those of other lands—bribes public officials; pays commissions, so-called, to men who stand close to public officials who have to buy the machinery of national defense for their countries.

Our friends the Du Ponts may resent bitterly any accusation that they engage in these nefarious practices, yet the record is clearly written that they do bribe where bribery is necessary to accomplish sale of their wares.

Sometimes the record of bribery is not as clear perhaps as it ought to be. However that may be, I should like to call to the attention of the Senate the effort of the Du Ponts to sell their powder in Poland. I should like to point out to the Senate how they sell their powder to Poland.

A man by the name of Klawe is the Du Pont representative in Poland. Mr. Taylor is the Du Pont European agent. Both those gentlemen have been in that capacity for many years.

January 18, 1928, finds Mr. Taylor writing to Mr. O'Gorman, of the Du Pont Co. in this country, concerning an order involving 300 tons of powder per year for Poland. I quote Mr. Taylor:

In order to get this we will have to pay 7-percent commission, of which 2 percent must be paid in its entirety the day of the signing of the contract.

On February 3, 1928, a couple of weeks later, Mr. O'Gorman responded to Mr. Taylor in this manner:

You may be sure, in the event that you conclude a deal along the lines indicated in your letter of January 18, that I will promptly remit by cable the amount involved to pay the 2-percent commission, so that there will be no delay.

The 7-percent commission involved in this particular order was an excessive one, admitted to be so by the Du Ponts.

On July 3, 1928, Mr. O'Gorman is found advising Mr. Taylor, the Du Pont representative over in Europe, in this manner:

This matter can be handled exactly the same as we did on the 1,000-ton contract, so that the money will be available upon receipt of telegraphic advices from you. You may rely upon me to personally take care of this matter, so that the funds will be placed to Mr. Klawe's credit within 48 hours after receipt of telegraphic advices from you.

Then let us read concerning this 1,000-ton order involved in this last letter; let us read of it as related by Mr. O'Gorman, writing to another executive in the Du Pont corporation concerning this man Klawe, the Du Pont representative in Poland. I quote now Mr. O'Gorman:

Mr. Klawe's commission on the 1,000-ton order contract was 7 percent, or approximately $126,000. Upon signing the contract, even before we received the Polish notes, we made an advance payment of commission to Klawe of $30,000. * * * You are fortunate to have Mr. Klawe as agent, as he is a man who is very well connected and thoroughly understands what must be done in order to secure business.

I will admit that that is not proof that the Du Ponts bribed anyone there; it is not, yet it invites pondering. But move with us for a moment over into China, where the Du Ponts do business.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the question of Poland, will he yield for a moment?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield to my colleague.

Mr. CLARK. The 300-ton contract to which the Senator just referred, if I recall correctly, extended over a period of 12 years, 300 tons a year to be delivered each year for 12 years.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. So that the down payment, the cash on the barrel head, which the Du Ponts were advancing, was 2 percent of the total contract, which they allocated over a period of 12 years, which amounted to 24 percent of the actual amount for any 1 year.

Mr. NYE. Exactly. I thank the Senator.

BRIBERY AND PRESENTS IN CHINA

Over in China outright bribery was resorted to in order to get business for the Du Ponts, and the Du Ponts knew of it. In a cablegram dated September 23, 1929, addressed by the Du Ponts to Colonel Taylor, in Europe, we find this language:

N. E. Bates would suggest we do not pay any other commission except 7.5 percent, Preston Wills, Dyestuffs, Wilmington. Du Pont dyestuffs office, Shanghai, China, will advance all prices at plant 5 percent for distribution as follows: 4 percent, Chinese Army, Nanking.

This is the commission for sale of Du Pont wares in China.

Four percent Chinese Army, Nanking; 1 percent Colonel de Fremery—

Who, incidentally, was a Dutch officer working under contract with the Chinese Government as an advisor—

One percent to Colonel de Fremery. We will advise Bates to settle definitely on the basis quoted.

Then, on August 22, 1929, Dr. Noelting, in charge of the Shanghai offices of the Du Ponts, wrote or cabled the Du Ponts as follows:

Anyway, presents will have to be given to various parties in China New Year, and the overprice we get can be used for this purpose.

The committee had before it endless records of correspondence and communications revealing how widely and desperately the industry does engage in bribery. They like to call it commissions—commissions, of course, for "doing the necessary", for "oil", as they refer to it at times, for "greasing the way", as another industry expresses bribery. But, oh, how they resent and burn when one suggests to them that it was bribery.

The evidence reveals that there was altogether too much to the part which the industry played in accomplishing defeat of embargo efforts that are made in legislative bodies, in accomplishing the defeat of disarmament causes all over the world, in accomplishing the defeat of resolutions which might be introduced here which might embarrass the industry.

INDUSTRY AGAINST INVESTIGATION

Last winter while there was pending the resolution of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself calling for this investigation of the munitions industry Mr. K. K. V. Casey, a very high and highly recognized agent of the Du Ponts, sat down and wrote this:

Had a talk with Colonel Brabson, of Military Intelligence, and drew his attention to the Nye resolution. As Colonel Brabson comes from Tennessee and is very close to Secretary Hull, he will discuss this matter with him, so that when the matter is referred to the State Department, at least they will be familiar with the situation and the possible disadvantages from the viewpoint of the Army.

No one knows better than the committee does that if the Du Pont effort did lead to an approach to Secretary Hull to do that which would prevent passage of this resolution, those who approached him failed miserably, because on the whole the committee has enjoyed splendid cooperation from the Secretary of State, both in accomplishing passage of the resolution and in fulfilling the study which has been undertaken under the resolution.

INDUSTRY FIGHTS ARMS EMBARGO

When a proposed embargo comes along that may deprive the American munitions makers of a market, they, through their lobbies here in Washington and capitals of the world, are on their toes to see that the strings are pulled to prevent anything that would be embarrassing to their business.

In 1926 there was a proposal for a convention to control the traffic in arms. We were all to send delegations to Geneva, and when the munitions makers in Europe awakened to what was about to take place, when they awakened to the fact that perhaps their industry was in jeopardy, they wrote letters, which are now of record, to our American munitions makers suggesting to them to get busy and prevent the kind of delegation coming to Geneva that would be embarrassing to the industry. Thereafter the head of an American munitions company wrote to the others, got them together, they talked it over, they came down here to Washington, and they went from place to place and from department to department trying to find out who were to be appointed as American delegates to the Geneva convention.

No one knew who was to be appointed—at least, we thought no one knew—but strangely enough, these men were steered for advice to men who were later actually named as delegates to the Geneva convention.

Then the munitions men went to the Department of Commerce, made known their displeasure with this convention, and the Secretary of Commerce was prevailed upon to get all the arms makers together in a conference here in Washington to talk over this proposal which was to be laid before the convention at Geneva. They came and conferred not only with the Secretary of Commerce but with the delegates who had been appointed by our Government to go to Geneva and who attended the arms makers' conference.

More than 3 weeks before the public knew who the delegates to that convention were to be, Mr. Casey of the Du Pont corporation, knew who they were to be. The record carries evidence of how secure, how confident were our munitions makers after this conference in Washington, how confident they were that Geneva was not going to do anything to hurt them, and yet, even after our delegation under Theodore Burton, our former colleague, had departed for Geneva, the munitions makers still were not going to take any chances. And they did not take any chances, but had the best kind of representation in Europe to see that the American delegation did not go wrong, or did not in anywise embarrass the American manufacturers of sporting arms.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I will ask the Senator to wait just a moment.

They had the best kind of representation over there, none other than the majority leader of that day in the House of Representatives, John Q. Tilson, who advised the munitions makers that he had been appointed or was to be appointed a confidential adviser to the American delegation—confidential to everyone, it seems, excepting the munitions makers who had irons in the fire in that convention.

Let me read the letter which John Q. Tilson wrote to Capt. H. F. Beebe, of the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. of New Haven, Conn., under date of April 24, 1925.

MY DEAR CAPTAIN BEEBE:—

To me a very interesting thing about all this corresponding and all this contact that our committee has had with the munitions industry has been the frequency with which the officers of these munition companies turn up with titles of "captain", "admiral", "major", "colonel"; and they are not all Kentucky colonels, either.

MY DEAR CAPTAIN BEEBE: My secretary forwarded to me your letter with enclosure relating to the Geneva conference which I am very glad indeed to have. It appears that I am to be designated either as a technical adviser or in some other capacity to attend this conference. I shall, therefore, be very glad to have any information that you may be able to give relating either to the general subject or to the interests of your company in particular. It is my desire to know as much as possible about the subject and I am sure that your advice will be helpful. Address me in care of the military attaché, American Embassy, 5 Rue de Chaillot, Paris.

My appointment to Geneva has not been announced, so far as I have seen, and in the letter to me from the War Department the matter was marked "confidential", therefore unless publication of the matter has been made it will be best to say nothing about my connection with the conference.

With best wishes, very sincerely yours,

JOHN Q. TILSON.

WHY DISARMAMENT EFFORT FAILS

That letter was written upon the stationery of the American Embassy in Paris. Yet some of us go on wondering, wondering why is it that there cannot be any accomplishment growing out of these repeated efforts to win disarmament in conferences? We do not get anywhere, my colleagues, because we leave alive the chance for profit to men through preparedness and through war. We get nowhere because we have not the courage to reach out and destroy that thing which plays altogether too large a part in the constant threat that is upon the doorstep of civilization of more and more war.

There are people in this world, there are people in our own country—can you not see how clear it is?—who do not want agreement for disarmament, who do not want any agreement that is going to cut these burdens of preparedness for war. They do not want it because if they cut the burdens which are upon the back of the public they cut their own profits.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall in that connection the correspondence which was exhibited before the committee in which one leading American munitions manufacturer referred to as "a pernicious activity" on the part of our State Department that it had been able to bring about a resumption of diplomatic relations between two South American countries which had broken off diplomatic relations and were about to have a war.

Mr. NYE. Exactly.

Mr. CLARK. And this American munitions manufacturer wrote to a British associate referring to those activities as "pernicious activities."

Mr. NYE. That is right.

Then on March 15, 1928, when the Burton resolution calling for embargoes was involved, we find Aiken Simons, high in the Du Pont ranks, writing to Mr. Beebe, of the Winchester Co., as follows concerning that proposed embargo. Incidentally Mr. Simons was one of the three or four men who the committee has been striving and wanting so badly to have before it for testimony. He is one of the three or four who has not been at all well. He has been one of the three or four whose name runs constantly through the record of the committee—the name of a man whom we have not yet seen, and I do not know that we are ever going to see him. For the most part their difficulties are, as reported to us by doctors, troubles of the heart.

INDUSTRY HAS GOVERNMENT IN HAND

Mr. Simons wrote to Beebe in March 1928 concerning this Burton resolution.

With the opposition of the War Department, the Navy Department, the State Department, the Department of Commerce, as well as the American Legion and certain Representatives on the floor, such as Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts, I do not think that we need worry very much about the passage of these resolutions.

My personal opinion is that any activity before Congress on the part of your company, mine, or other munitions manufacturers would prove a detriment rather than a help to our cause in that it would enable the pacifists and seditious elements to claim that munitions manufacturers encourage war and the trade in war material for their own benefit.

We know what use the munitions industry made of Mr. Shearer when they wanted to destroy prospects of any successful agreement concerning disarmament.

SELLING "DEFENSE" TO POSSIBLE FOES

I suppose no one ought to be surprised at the revelations concerning the freedom with which our American munitions makers are selling their supplies, the patent rights, the specifications, and designs, and the right to make them all over the earth, including those countries which are most apt to be our foes in another war, and incidentally to this particular country for which we have to look out—doing it all over the world and doing it, and it seems to me a sad state too, because the War Department, the Navy Department, the Government itself say it is the right thing to do, that our national defense requires that American munition makers create as large a market for their wares all over the world as they possibly can.

Why? It is reasonable—why? Because the greater the foreign market, our Government says, the greater the sale of American munitions of war to other lands, the larger the capacity we will have in America at our command when and if the emergency of war strikes us!

Look at it in just a slightly different way. We must sell munitions to foreign lands, including those who may be opposed to us in another war, so we can have a sufficiently large capacity to produce what we need if and when those other countries decide to use against us what our munition merchants have sold to them!

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield to the Senator from Texas.

NATIONALIZATION

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator's committee arrive at any conclusion with respect to the wisdom or unwisdom of the Government itself manufacturing its own munitions?

Mr. NYE. I am glad the Senator has asked the question. The committee is under specific instructions to make a study and to report to the Senate on that particular question. The committee has done some of it. The committee has much more to study and to undertake in that direction. It would be very unfair for me to say what the conclusions of the committee are respecting nationalization of the munitions industry. For my own part I am prepared to say that the more I learn of the pernicious practices of the private munitions manufacturers, the more I come to feel that perhaps we cannot stop anywhere short of nationalization of some of these industries engaged in the manufacture of national-defense machinery.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. When does the Senator think his committee will be ready to report? Will it be in time for legislation at this session of Congress or will it be necessary to wait until the following session?

Mr. NYE. The committee expects to be able to report sufficiently in the way of findings and in the way of recommendations to permit of very liberal advancement in a legislative way during this session of Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator say the report will be submitted before the 1st of April?

Mr. NYE. I could not undertake to say at this moment. The committee is desirous of expediting its work so far as it can. The committee will sit down tomorrow morning and determine how it might best proceed to hasten and speed up the completion of this work.

Let me say to the Senator from Texas that he and others little realize how extensive and how expansive is the field of study on that question of nationalization alone. Not for 5 minutes has our War Department given any consideration to the issue of nationalization. They are against it. They have reported against it. But they have never enabled themselves to say what such nationalization would cost. They have never given it any study to enable them to know what we would have to possess ourselves of in the way of capacity to produce our own munition requirements. We have that very large field of investigation to be covered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I would simply call the attention of the Senator from Texas and of the Senate to the fact which we all admit, that much remains of this investigation yet to be completed. It is through no fault of the committee, because we have advanced just as far and in fact a little farther than the authorization of funds heretofore given us by the Senate really allowed us to do. As a matter of fact, if we had had more funds we might have been able to make our report on the first day of this session.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from North Dakota will allow me to interrupt further——

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that my query was not prompted by any thought of criticism of the committee or anything the committee has done, but merely with the view of getting some legislation relating to the matter.

Mr. CLARK. I did not for a moment suppose that the Senator from Texas was criticizing the committee. I merely wanted to point out that the progress of our investigation up to date has necessarily been regulated by the amount of money appropriated for our use by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator that it is all very well to make speeches, but, after all, unless we are going to legislate in response to the investigation of this committee, we will have to make another similar investigation 2 or 3 years from now, and go over the same ground again.

Mr. NYE. During the first hours of this present session of the Senate there was introduced, with the unanimous approval of the committee and at its request, a resolution calling for additional funds. The resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and has not yet been reported out of that committee. That committee gave our request consideration this morning. I hope that tomorrow morning there will be brought before the Senate the report of that committee. If not, I am afraid we are going to have to disrupt whatever plans we have been able to make for expediting our work and abandon the call which has gone out for witnesses to appear before our committee on next Monday. I hope that does not come to pass as a necessary step.

Mr. CONNALLY. I merely want to suggest that I am very hopeful of being able to approach this matter from a legislative viewpoint, and I entertain some sort of hope that it might be done quickly.

Mr. NYE. If anyone is entertaining the slightest notion that our committee, or any individual on the committee, wants to prolong for one unnecessary day this investigation, or that there is anyone on the committee who is not wholly anxious and desirous of getting quick legislative results on it, I wish there might be a clearing away of that thought, because no one is more interested in obtaining results than are the members of the committee. There are those on the committee who feel it would be a frightful mistake to undertake legislation with only half a picture to legislate upon, especially when we know what more is to come and what more we think is to come in the way of information as the result of our continued study.

Mr. President, it is true that the munitions industry, including our American industry, goes into other lands, stirs up other peoples, stirs up nations, breeds fear, hatred, and suspicion, drives nations and peoples into war, and then keeps them in it just as long as it can.

Mr. Frank Jonas for years has been a salesman in South America in the employ of an American firm. Jonas was transferred to Cuba a few years ago, with instructions to sell products of his company's manufacture to the rebels who were trying to overthrow the Cuban Government; and the same company paid the same salesman a little higher commission when the same salesman sold similar supplies to the Cuban Government, which was trying to put down the rebels.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves Mr. Jonas, I think it would be particularly pertinent to read into the RECORD two sentences from his testimony. This is the testimony of Mr. Frank Jonas, the munitions agent of the Remington Arms and the Federal Laboratories:

> We certainly are in one hell of a business when a fellow has to wish for trouble so as to make a living; the only consolation being, however, if we don't get the business, someone else will. It would be a terrible state of affairs if my conscience started to bother me now.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK. In that connection, Mr. Jonas is a brother of another Mr. Jonas, who is a representative of the Winchester Arms, who boasted before the committee that he had bribed the minister of war of a Central American country, and he had notified his company about that, and had not been reproved, reprimanded, or discharged.

Mr. NYE. That is true.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I just want to know from the Senator from North Dakota if there is any disposition on the part of anybody to stop this investigation. Down my way, it just looks to me from reading the papers—that is about all I could see—that the water is getting hot around here for some people, and they are trying to sidetrack the investigation. Is that the attitude? It looked to me as if the committee were getting right close to home on some of them. I did not know but that maybe there is a little squall being raised that the Senate ought to stop this thing and do something before the committee gets right to the point where these devils will be really found out. Has there been any disposition to stop this investigation?

Mr. NYE. Of course, not all the hot water is down in Louisiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. They investigated me for two and a half years.

Mr. NYE. I want to say to the Senator, however, that if there is any such disposition there certainly has not been evidence of it in any such shape or form as would enable me to say that there is one soul in the Senate who does not want the investigation to go on.

Mr. LONG. I was just hoping there was none. It seemed to me that if they investigated me for two and a half years it would not hurt to have about a year's time devoted to these damned scoundrels.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Jonas says, "this is a hell of a business", and "a hell of a business" it is—the business of bringing hell on earth just as fast as they and their kind know how to bring it, because they know there is larger profit when the hell that war is is in being.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from North Dakota stated, in reply to the Senator from Louisiana, that he was quite confident there was no one in this body, meaning the Senate, who was making any effort to terminate the investigation. I am sure the learned Senator did not mean to indicate that in the War Department or the administrative or any other branch of the Government there was such effort; did he?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am going to have to decline to answer the question which I know the Senator very respectfully submits. I cannot answer the question without possibly doing grave injustice to men who are not deserving of that sort of attitude at all.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, does the Senator mean "justice" or "injustice"? [Laughter.]

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, to me—I do not know what the reaction of others has been—the most vicious feature of all the disclosures as a result of this investigation has been the revelation of a partnership that exists in the munitions business. The question was asked a while back, "What about nationalizing the munitions industry?" Quite as important, perhaps, as nationalizing the industry—perhaps more important—is the destruction of a partnership which exists in the munitions industry today; a partnership in an industry which has international tie-ups, which finds munitions makers the world over dividing territory, sharing profits, paying commissions to one another. The partnership of which I speak is the partnership which our Government—your Government and mine—has in the business of selling American munitions of war.

Jonas says it is "a hell of a business"; yet in this hellish business which it is, is the Government of the United States, going to all quarters of the earth to help American munitions makers sell their wares to other lands!

The munitions boys went to work on Peru a few years ago. They convinced Peru that she did not have an adequate national defense. Peru appealed to her good friend and adviser, Uncle Sam, "Won't you help us plan a national defense?" Uncle Sam sent down there, as a loan to Peru, a commission of our American naval experts, who planned with Peruvian officials a national defense for Peru. Among other things recommended by our commission was that Peru buy some submarines and destroyers, and Peru bought them. Of course we can all imagine how much weeping and wailing there was at Groton, Conn., when this order came in for submarines for Peru.

When Peru got her submarines, however, she did just what all of us liked to do, or used to do, in demonstrating any particular strength that was ours as boys: She went on parade with her new muscle. She went on parade with these new submarines to a point where her neighbor, Colombia, awakened one morning with a start, wondering if she had an adequate national defense against Peru's submarines, which were Peru's national defense; and the Government of Colombia appealed to Uncle Sam to send American experts down there to help them plan a national defense.

We sent down the experts. Incidentally, I believe those experts advised Colombia that they ought to have some more submarines to provide a defense, incidentally, against the defensive submarines that Peru had bought 2 or 3 years before; and one of these days, just as likely as not, we are going to have to load some of our fine marines on a couple of battleships or more and send them off down into that country in those troubled waters to straighten out trouble that no one is more responsible for than are we by reason of the will of our Government to help the munitions industry sell its wares all over the world.

Here is a photograph in which I think the Senate will find a lot of interest.

Back in 1928 the Driggs Armament Corporation developed a brand new type of gun for mounting on naval vessels, a very heavy weapon, not the kind that you can drag around with you. So efficient was it, so large an advantage was there in this particular gun, that the American Navy bought enough of them to equip a few of our fleet. Then Mr. Driggs sent his salesmen off to Europe to sell the same kind of gun to Europe, so that Europe could have the same efficiency, I suppose, that we had over here in this American development.

Europe would not do business with these salesmen because the salesmen were unable to demonstrate, or were unable to submit a sample of this new gun. The European nations would not buy, though they discussed it. The salesmen went off to Turkey, thinking that the officials of Turkey would not care so much; that they would not be so insistent about samples and demonstrations. But they found those officials insistent, too. In spite of all the fine parties the American salesmen staged, still the admirals and the generals of Turkey would not budge, deploring, as they all did, inability to get together and do business.

I should like to imagine them on one bright day down on the docks in Constantinople, all trying to console one another at their misfortune, probably saying, "We cannot do business simply because there is not a sample, no demonstration."

Imagine, if you can, their surprise, as they sat there deploring the situation, the surprise of these salesmen, the surprise of the admirals and generals of the Turkish Army and Navy, the surprise of the Minister of War of Turkey, all of them here on the dock, when into the harbor moved the good ship Raleigh, one of the few American ships equipped with this new naval gun. Imagine their happiness when the good ship Raleigh dropped anchor, and these American salesmen took on board the Minister of War of Turkey, the admirals and generals of Turkey, and our accommodating naval boys proceeded to show them what a fine weapon this gun was. Mr. Driggs' salesmen wrote out an order for like guns for the Turkish Navy, making of our Navy in this, as it was in other cases, nothing more than a salesman's sample case, pure and simple, a pretty expensive one, but one which we seem to like to maintain and support here in the United States.

Much has been said about what a desperate state of affairs would be ours if we did not have a private munitions industry producing munitions of war, because from the private industry comes all the development, all the progress, in armaments, all the progress in accomplishing a larger and more efficient national defense. Some day somebody is going to be prepared to show just how much private industry has contributed to that condition, and when the facts are known, it is going to be revealed, just as surely as that we are here today, that the real contributors have been our Army and Navy experts, while the profiteers, developing what the Navy and Army experts have started, have run away with millions in the name of national defense.

I think it was in 1925 that our Navy experts completed development of the air-cooled motor, a great advance in national defense, a splendid instrument. A private corporation was organized. The Senator from Missouri told us a few days ago of its investment to produce this motor. The Navy loaned this private corporation its experts to further develop and perfect that air-cooled motor. That corporation did a splendid business, some years a hundred percent of its business with the United States Navy, other years a little business with other lands, including those most apt to be our foes in the event of another war.

This corporation has found a fine market for its air-cooled motor in Germany, in Japan, and elsewhere, but in all these years, from its organization in 1925, 90 percent or more of the business of that corporation has been with the United States Navy, and the profit of that corporation upon that business during those years has been 1,143,000, not dollars, but 1,143,000 percent upon its invested capital, and that percentage is figured without computing the increased value of stock in the company through these years.

Partners we are with the munitions makers, partners indeed, but not, if you please, when the Government in its partnership with these munitions makers asks for reasonable cooperation. The United States Government does manufacture some of its own ammunition. It manufactures largely its .30-caliber ammunition at the arsenal in Frankford. The private industry, the Western Cartridge Co., Peters, Remington, and Winchester, have been displeased about the Government taking that business away from them, and a few years ago they pleaded with the officials of the arsenal, they pleaded with the War Department, for such cooperation as would permit a study that would accomplish understanding of just what the costs were. They said, "If you let us bring this study to a point where all costs can be determined on a comparable basis, we shall be able to show you that the Government cannot produce its own ammunition more cheaply than can the private industry."

Our Government gave them every cooperation, in return for which the Government expected to have given to it the result of this study by the private industry of costs, charging up presumably all natural costs, all ordinary overhead costs, taxes, and everything against the Government industry, as well as against the private industry.

One day the arsenal officials wrote to the industry and said, "Can we not have a copy of your study?" That was long after the study had been undertaken. The industry notified the Government that the study was not yet in shape to be given out. Yet a week before that they had distributed among themselves a statement of the results of that study.

The Government of the United States never was able to get a copy of the result of that study, and never would have had knowledge of the result of the study except for the fact that one of our committee investigators who went into the Winchester and Remington files dug out a copy of the result of that study by the private industry, and when one sees what the result is, it is not difficult to understand why they did not want anyone, least of all the Government, to know what the result of their study was.

I have here some figures reached as a result of that study, figures showing the cost of producing .30-caliber ammunition.

In the Peters Cartridge Co. shop, $29.21 per thousand.

In the Remington shop, $28.88 per thousand.

In the Western Cartridge Co. shop, $33.87 per thousand.

In the Winchester shop, $31.67 per thousand.

On a comparable cost basis, in the Frankford Arsenal, at Philadelphia, owned by the Government, the cost was $23.18 per thousand.

So the cost in the Government plant was 33 percent less than the average cost of production in the shops of the four private institutions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want the Senator to be sure to emphasize that in these relative figures every possible necessary adjustment has been made in order to bring the operation of the public arsenal to a parity with the operation of the private plants—taxes, interest on investment, every essential bookkeeping item—so as to create a parity in order that the ultimate conclusion shall be accurate and justifiable.

Mr. NYE. Yes. If the Senator remembers, the committee pleaded with the industry to show wherein these findings were wrong. The industry were sure they were wrong, but they could not tell us wherein they were wrong. They insisted that they had endeavored to make a complete study.

Mr. President, I certainly am not going to prolong any further the Senate's agony this afternoon. Naturally, the question arises as to what we can do about all this. Of course, we can hope that pending international effort to accomplish agreement is going to prevail in accomplishing control over this industry. The munitions makers, however, like nothing better than the conviction in the public mind that the only approach to the munitions-control subject is through international agreement. They quake and they fear when they think that a single government might try to correct these ills in a domestic way. There is much that we can do in a domestic way, irrespective of what the rest of the world might choose or might not choose to do in cooperation with us. If we permit ourselves to get in the frame of mind that the only correction of this terrible mess lies through international agreement, we are going to give to the munitions makers the world over the most hopeful handle to grab hold of that they have seen in a good many months.

We should hope for, we should anticipate, ultimate international agreement. It will simplify matters very, very much indeed. Surely, however, we can proceed in a domestic way in very large measure to straighten out and bring into the line of fair play and decency our own munitions makers. Assuredly we can do something, do much, to destroy the motive of profit that rests in war and in preparation for war. If we do not do these things, I do not know why we should have any pity concerning the dangers confronting us of lasting troubles and of more and more war.

Eugene Schneider, great munitions maker of Europe, addressing his stockholders not so long ago, stockholders of a great munitions industry, declared—and I quote him now in his exact language:

> The defense of our country has brought us satisfactions which cannot be ignored.

Mr. President, when civilization awakens to the intimate relationships existing between war, preparation for war, and a will for industry or individuals to profit from it, there will arise an uncompromising people demanding their complete divorcement; and they will not be content with any compromise in bringing about that divorcement. If, on the other hand, we sit aside and do nothing about it, or find ourselves unable to do anything about it—if we cannot accomplish this kind of divorcement between war, preparation for war, and profit in it—we might as well resign ourselves to the inevitable; resign ourselves to glorying, for example, in military parades as those parades swing down the avenues here in Washington and elsewhere with a demonstration of unpardonable, unbelievable fact.

Watch the next parade; thrill in it, as I hope we all will continue to do; but look at it. Look at the guns the boys carry—guns for use in defense against a country perhaps armed with the same identical kind of gun. Look at the gas masks they carry to protect their own lungs against the gases which American manufacturers have sold to those countries against which we may have to use the gas masks some day. And those beautiful, glistening steel helmets, look at them, and then ask yourselves, why? It is the product of an American steel manufacturer sold to the Government at a profit. But why a steel helmet? Mr. President, to protect the fine head under that helmet against the shrapnel and the shell that the same steel manufacturer has sold to all the world, including those nations that might be our foes in the event of another war, including that nation of which at times we speak in a whisper, "Look out for them! Look out for them!"

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION—AMENDMENT TO RULES

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a notice in writing of my intention to move to amend rule XXV and ask to have the notice read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The notice will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

In compliance with the terms of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice that it is my intention to offer a resolution to amend rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate by adding after the paragraph in said rule reading as follows: "Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to consist of 17 Senators," a new paragraph reading as follows: "Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to consist of 17 Senators."

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT CLERKS TO SENATORS

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 39, which I reported earlier in the day, with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 39), submitted by Mr. BYRNES on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That whenever during the remainder of the present session of Congress a Senator shall file with the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a statement showing the necessity for an additional clerical assistant to enable him to discharge the duties of his office, such Senator may appoint one assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,500 per annum until the end of the present session of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "That", on line 1, down to and including the word "such", on line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "each", so as to read:

Resolved, That each Senator may appoint one assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,500 per annum, until the end of the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection, but the resolution is legislation, and it is late in the day; so I suggest that it go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

LETTERS AND ADDRESSES BY SENATOR ASHURST

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some letters and addresses by myself and also an editorial.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Monday, March 13, 1933

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received, as doubtless many Senators have, a large number of telegraphic dispatches respecting Senate bill No. 233, a bill to maintain the credit of the United States Government. One of the dispatches reads as follows:

"I feel it my duty to advise that your future success is in grave danger if you uphold granting Presidential power."

Another reads:

"Your attitude very unsatisfactory. You are taking $6,300,000 annually from Arizona, and are politically dead unless you change your attitude."

Mr. President, sometime ago I made the astonishing and for awhile, to myself, the distressing discovery that the perpetuity of the American Government did not absolutely depend upon the reelection of one HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST to the Senate of the United States.

When a Senator makes such a discovery at first the fact appears incredible. It seems as if the stars above his head had faded and the earth had slipped beneath his feet. But, as time rolls on, such a discovery proves to be a real antidote to megalomania; and the furtner flight of time brings to the discoverer a serenity and a humility to be envied by the world's greatest philosophers.

It may be, Mr. President, that the perpetuity of the American Republic does not depend upon my reelection to the Senate; but the perpetuity of the Republic may indeed depend upon granting to the President the authority to make the economies called for in his message to Congress.

Wednesday, January 10, 1934

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD copies of certain letters I have sent to citizens of Arizona.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 29, 1933.

Mr. G. H. BROWN,
Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR MR. BROWN: Yours of May 25 received, advising that you desire a position with the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and you request me to recommend you to the new collector at Phoenix as soon as he is appointed.

It is my duty to tell you that the district attorney, marshal, collector of internal revenue, collector of customs, and register of the local land office, respectively, will be appointed upon the recommendations of the United States Senators from Arizona.

In my judgment, it would be improper for a Federal Senator to make any suggestion as to whom such persons thus recommended by Federal Senators should appoint. The Federal officials who may be appointed upon my recommendation shall be left free to select their own assistants, deputies, accountants, and clerks.

On this point I may be—probably am—censurably delicate, but it is my inflexible rule to which I adhered during the Wilson administrations. Quite naturally, I desire to please as many of my constituents as possible and to offend as few of them as possible, but I believe in the principle of absolute noninterference by Federal Senators in the selection of the subordinates of Federal officials appointed upon my recommendation.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

---

OCTOBER 16, 1933.

Mr. G. A. ROBERD,
Phoenix, Ariz.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your letter received advising that the chamber of commerce had denounced Senator HAYDEN and myself for not securing larger sums of Federal funds for Arizona.

This complaint of the chamber of commerce is not at all unique, for daily, from the mail bags, there are dumped upon my desk demands that this, that, or the other industry be nourished by some gift, bounty, or largess out of the Federal Treasury.

I sympathize somewhat with the impatience of the chamber of commerce and say in reply that I have worked harder since March 4 last than I have ever worked before, but I am not complaining, for, when an officeholder complains of overwork, he is simply proving that he has a task too big for him.

I have been for years a critic and hope I am able, without making a wry face, to take a small dose of that medicine—criticism—of which I have given other fellows sizable doses; in other words, I not only ladle it out but can also take it. Pardon my dropping into slang, but it conveys my thought precisely.

I believe you are correct in your conclusion that a number of candidates—all excellent gentlemen—will try to displace me at the next election, but it is beginning to appear as if I shall be reelected, not by reason of any particular merit that I possess or by any political activity on my part but by the folly of my opponents.

Kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

---

DECEMBER 18, 1933.

Mr. W. H. PETERSEN,
16 South Twentieth Avenue, Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR FRIEND: Your letter of December 10 received requesting the payment of the adjusted-service (compensation) certificates before their maturity.

During the years when no deficit existed in the Federal finances I supported the adjusted-service (compensation) legislation, and I do not believe I made any mistake in so voting.

The question of cashing the adjusted-service (compensation) certificates before their maturity depends now upon the condition of the Federal Treasury.

If the Treasury may without disaster cash these certificates before they fall due, I should, so far as I am able to perceive at this time, be inclined to vote to cash the certificates now, provided always the Treasury may stand the strain.

If, however, the Treasury may not meet this demand and could not pay the certificates before maturity, I would not vote, and could not be expected to vote, to bring a collapse of our national credit. It is a principle of my personal and political conduct, and the same principle should guide governments, never to hold out a promise where such promise is obviously incapable of fulfillment; in other words, do not make promises unless you are certain you can translate the promises into actuality.

I decline to make promises that cannot be fulfilled.

I refuse to raise up hopes that I know will be dashed to the ground.

I shall indeed give careful consideration to and make a close investigation of the question of the ability of the Treasury to pay these certificates before their maturity.

I realize that the phrase "give careful consideration and make a close examination" is sometimes used as a polite euphemism for postponed negation, but I am not using the phrase in that sense, for I shall examine the subject in the hope of finding that the Treasury's condition may justify my voting to pay the certificates before they are actually due; and if, upon investigation, the facts show that the Treasury cannot stand that strain, I shall not be a party to an insincere gesture of pretending to pay an immature obligation out of an empty Treasury.

Kind regards.

Cordially yours, HENRY F. ASHURST.

JANUARY 2, 1934.

Mr. A. L. MOORE,
Route 2, Box 223, Tucson, Ariz.

DEAR FRIEND: Your letter of December 25 received, in which you say, "I ask you to work for and vote for repeal of this economy act."

I should be lacking in frankness and deficient in courtesy if I failed to tell you that I shall support President Roosevelt all along the line.

A crisis of terrible proportions, bringing many distressful results, came upon our country and has not lifted its blight from us; hence all citizens must continue to make sacrifices for their country's welfare.

It is often quite true that the only way in which an officeholder may render great service to the Nation, in its day of trouble, is by his willingness to lose his future or at least to lose his present position in political life, if he may thereby aid in bringing national recovery, just as the soldier may for a time give up a part of his civil liberties and may pay with his physical life in order to render service for his country in battle.

Whenever grave danger comes to our Nation, whether from unemployment, famine, fire, flood, war, pestilence, or depression, the officeholder must be willing to take action which might be temporarily unpopular if he may thereby aid in the recovery of his country.

I shall follow the President's leadership, and if he should urge that the present law be amended so as to meet your request, I shall support his efforts in that behalf.

Kind regards.

Sincerely yours, HENRY F. ASHURST.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR JOHN B. KENDRICK, BY SENATOR ASHURST

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, on the 27th day of April the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] wrote a letter to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in which he paid so very eloquent and beautiful a tribute to the memory of the late Senator John B. Kendrick that I think it should be preserved in the RECORD. The letter is as follows:

APRIL 27, 1934.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senator from Wyoming,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: You were one of the closest friends our departed John B. Kendrick ever knew.

Romance and emprise clustered around him, and although his lips have now partaken of the sacraments of the dust, the influence of his character survives and is treasured by his relatives, his friends, and his proud State.

Senator Kendrick possessed that heaven-born attribute which the English call a "cool head" and the Americans call "judgment"; hence, in sharp parliamentary contests and stormy conventions, he held true to the main purpose, was master of himself and of the business at hand.

He was a practical idealist. Nature in one of her prodigal moods stamped upon him her royal seal.

Even when he viewed the swelling dome and the fluted pilasters of the Nation's Capitol he wistfully yearned for the far-away rim of the prairie.

Amidst the din and sensation of politics in Washington he longed for his shining Tetons and his gorgeous Yellowstone. His nostrils were always eager for the pungent odor of the wild sage, and his kindly eyes ever sought to descry the scarlet glory of the blossoming cactus.

In public office he trod the paths of his feet with marvelous circumspection, and he was inspired by an ardent enthusiasm for the public good. He was a competent Governor, a successful and influential United States Senator. He was a real cowboy, and he became the most distinguished of all of those excellent and racy spirits who, 50 years ago, drove the thundering herds.

The cowboy's work, like a particolored robe, is so woven about Senator Kendrick that a word describing the cowboy he so truly typified may not be out of place here.

No belted knight in chivalry on heath or strand ever appealed with such allurement and glamour as did the American knights of the remuda.

Among the cowboys there were varying degrees of sophistication, for they were drawn from the different walks of life. The majority, however, were drawn from pioneer stock. The nature of the cowboy's occupation afforded him scant opportunity for extended reading, for he must needs constantly attend the cattle.

If this cow range was on the desert, he must grind its bitter dust between his teeth, endure its flail of heat, and ride on and on. If his range was on the mountain, he must, in winter, ride hard beneath the cold stars. The cowboy's life was one of severe isolation, but his work was not only made endurable but was even rendered pleasurable as well when he took refuge, as many, if not most of them, did, during their lonely rides, by entering into the realm of imagination, where ideal experiences are possible without objective restraint—a realm where images form and fall; where glittering towers upthrust themselves and globes of gold expand and float; a domain peopled with a viewless throng, invisible to all but the eye of the imaginer, and in this way a high percentage of the American cowboys became endowed with intellect and grace, fascination and tremendous personal charm.

Senator Kendrick symbolized the American cowboy—calm, steady, generous, fair, adaptable, industrious, and firmly devoted to the rugged old virtues which made our Nation great and strong.

With high esteem, sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator from Arizona.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Thursday, January 4, 1934

Mr. ASHURST. My proposed amendment strikes at an evil in our system of taxation which is already great, and if unchecked will grow—indeed has grown—to such magnitude as to threaten the existence of our institutions.

The existence of conditions that enable any municipality or political subdivision to issue tax-free securities directly permits a certain class of property owners to partake of the comforts and benefits of government without bearing any share of the expense burden of government.

All private property should pay its just proportion of the expense of maintaining the Government.

The issuance of tax-exempt securities permits:

(1) A large portion of property to escape taxation, thereby causing great loss of revenue.

(2) It violates the sound tax principle of ability to pay and it unfairly discriminates among taxpayers.

(3) It discourages investment in new enterprises.

(4) It encourages extravagances of governmental agencies.

(5) It grants private subsidies and special privileges, obnoxious to our system.

(6) By withdrawing money from private enterprises it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government, and thereby adds to the cost of living.

(7) It creates, and quite naturally, social unrest.

Vigor and vision are the supreme need of the hour, and unless we act with promptness on this subject, the National Government and some of the States will bog down and sink into the grasp of the all-smothering, all-destroying quicksands of insolvency.

ADMISSION TAXES

In the Senate of the United States, May 26, 1932

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I invite attention to the fact that the spoken drama in the United States is now almost extinguished. I do not believe we have reached such a deplorable place in our history that we would be willing unfairly to tax or to penalize the spoken drama or the talkie movie.

I am opposed to admission taxes, whether for the spoken drama or the talkie movies. Such taxes are only an irritant—they are like unto a dash of Tabasco sauce in the eye and will be resented by the American people. Some well-informed persons argue that the theaters and talkie movies are luxuries and amusements only. That they are, from one angle, amusements is quite true; that they possess facilities for disseminating interesting information of much practical value, especially to those persons who cannot spare the time or money to travel, is none the less true.

It is also true that the theaters and the talkie movies make contributions to art, belles-lettres, literature, music, science, and philosophy, and appeal to and help to gratify that inborn cultural and artistic yearning inherent in every normal person; although in some breasts this yearning is meager and obscure, and sometimes is deeply hidden.

Robert Burns, during a flash of his shining genius, wrote, in his Address to the Unco Guid, or in his address To a Louse, I do not for the moment remember which, "Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us to see oursels as ithers see us."

The stage artists, the screen artists, and the vaudeville artists hold the mirror up to nature and only through them do we ever see ourselves as others see us.

On the stage and on the screen we see our own weaknesses, foibles, and pretensions made plain and then corrected. On the stage and on the screen the richness of human experience is laid before us, and all that is beautiful, all that is tragic, and all that is mournful in man's destiny is clearly shown.

The penetrating skill, the Attic salt, and the humor of the screen artist and the stage artist expose the shams and frivolities of a particular epoch and not infrequently teach a nation the way of truth.

The plays of Aeschylus and Euripides taught the Greeks to meet disaster becomingly and to realize that although Fate spins a strange pattern and motif into every career, such circumstance affords no reason for a refusal to meet life courageously and cheerfully.

The comedies of Shakespeare enriched England, softened the cruelties of his time, and gave seasonable advice and admonition to monarch, to lords, and commons. There would have been no polished Elizabethan England except for Shakespeare, who appeared personally in some of his own plays, notably his Twelfth Night, which he acted in 1602, and from the stage poured gentle satire upon vanity and injustice.

I do not doubt that Schiller and Goethe helped Germany, and I am certain that Molière and Rostand and Bernhardt enriched France. Who can measure the joy and the emotional sympathy that Dion Boucicault gave to the world? He was called the scribe of the American and English stage and had 124 dramas to his credit.

Unnumbered thousands of our own generation have been charmed by the melodious airs and clever rimes of the Gilbert and Sullivan light operas, and the talent of those two gentlemen was so exceptional and their criticisms of official smugness and complacency were so deft and subtle that their productions were given audition and applause by the most prim and rigid of the Mid-Victorians.

It would be impossible to estimate the ennobling influence showered upon our Nation by such characters as Edwin Booth and David Belasco.

Amidst the gloom of the depression and out of the darkness of the country's financial and industrial misfortune, there suddenly beamed forth, last winter, when the clouds were lowering, five stars, five distinguished Thespians to tour our country: The superb Maude Adams and the well-beloved Otis Skinner revived the Merchant of Venice; William Gillette came back to us in Sherlock Holmes; Ethel Barrymore reproduced Sheridan's School for Scandal; and Walter Hampden gave us again glorious Cyrano de Bergerac, the fascinating yet futile lover, poet, duelist, and hero of seventeenth century France. How many weary hours these artists beguiled; how many desolate hearts they encouraged; how many of our citizens learned anew from them that moderation, forbearance, and restraint are the virtues of victory and prosperity and that fortitude, patience, and courage are the virtues of disaster and defeat.

The drama is coextensive with the people and of all the arts, save music, it is probably the dearest to the human race. The stage is akin to poetry in that it is a great expression of human emotion. The stage is a vision of the romance inseparable from every human life; it is a magical place, breathing the inspiration of color and sound; a place for high thoughts, splendid truths, and beautiful words, for objects vividly observed and gorgeously imagined.

The stage is art. Art is truth, and in the final sum of worldly things, only art endures; the sculptures outlast the dynasty, the colors outlive Da Vinci, the coin outlasts Tiberius.

When Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, desired a rehearsal of the play which was to confound his uncle the king he said to the players: "Come, give us a taste of your quality." After the players had recited Hamlet turned to Polonius, the lord chamberlain, and said:

"My lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used, for they are the abstracts and brief chronicles of the time; after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you lived."

So, Mr. President, when our citizens, after a day devoted to the duties and claims of this fevered life, go to the theater or to the talkie movies, there to renew their exhausted strength, there mayhap to escape for an hour from the specter of their baffled hopes, from their broken ideals or evaporated illusions, so common in this complex machine age, or there to be spared for an evening from the fardels and the clangor of a bewildered world, let them not be met with a Federal admission tax, which, as I said before, is a vexatious, corrosive, pestiferous irritant.

SENATOR ASHURST SPEAKS

If politics could be conducted on the high plane with which Senator HENRY ASHURST conducts his campaigns, there would probably be more intelligent interest in governmental affairs and abler men aspiring to office. Those who heard the distinguished Senator speak Friday night at the armory heard a political campaign speech full of holes if one wanted to criticize but filled with charm, good humor, and kindliness. And, strangely enough, those who went expecting to listen for a few minutes soon found themselves staying on and staying on, consumed with interest.

Although Senator ASHURST spoke for over an hour, he said not one unkind nor harsh word about any of his opponents, while his brilliant shafts of wit had the audience frequently convulsed with laughter. On the other hand, the serious parts of his address, while filled with kindly but serious political bombast, won him the respect of his audience.

After all, a man can still be radical, yet be a gentleman. A man can win votes and still be a gentleman. The highest tribute that can be paid to Senator ASHURST is that for 41 years he has been in politics, yet he is a gentleman, and as such sets an example that other candidates, and even newspaper editors, might emulate.

Meanwhile, the Senator's opposition is a healthy thing. The opposition has brought him home so that the home folks once more can hear his delightful speeches.

ASHURST PAYS TRIBUTE TO GOVERNOR HUNT; PORTRAYS ROMANCE OF THE CAREER OF GOVERNOR IN CAMPAIGN SPEECH

There is much romance in the career of George W. P. Hunt, who came into Arizona 50 years ago, during the now vanished days of the burro pack train, the shave-tail mule, and the covered wagon. Most of the men and women who came here during those days have crossed another frontier into the Great Kingdom; whilst for those pioneers who yet remain, the lovely nymphs of noonday are gone and their temples are crowned with silver streaks of the eternal dawn.

The 50 years of Mr. Hunt's residence in Arizona are equal to one-third of the present age of our American Republic and constitute a glorious epoch in the life of the Nation and the State. The purse of Fortunatus and the lamp of Aladdin seem tame and commonplace, when compared to Arizona's progress since Mr. Hunt lighted his first camp fire within her borders.

He saw the teepee and the hogan of the Indian give place to stately residences. He saw the railroad trains supplant the stagecoach and the buckboard, which once bounced and jolted over the rough and rudimentary roads. He now sees automobiles whizz over the very hills and valleys where once he saw the cowboy with jingling spurs, haystack hat, and leather chaps ride hard under the summer sun and winter stars for cattle and horses.

The same plains which once he knew as the habitat of wild beasts and upon which he later saw the quiet flocks of sheep feed upon the rich grasses beneath their feet are now covered by diversified agriculture, industrial enterprises, glittering cities and towns, or serve as airports and landing fields for winged cars that cleave the clouds and that skim the cream from off the milky way.

Some of the landscapes where once he saw the Knights of the Lariat hold their round-ups and rodeos are now covered by commanding schools, colleges, entertainment resorts for tourists, dude ranches, palatial hotels, and churches whose spires kiss the golden sunbeams.

Some of the particular spots where once he saw the noon breeze swirl the smoke of the cowboy's branding iron are now midget or Tom Thumb golf courses.

The air spaces which, when he came here 50 years ago, were agitated by the coyote's doleful howl, by the barkings of the prairie dog, the measured thrum of the mustang's hoofs, the war whoop of the ferocious Apache encircling the settler, now by the mystic voice of the radio, pour into our ears the Tales of Hoffman, the dulcet notes of Narcissus, the wild melodies of the Hungarian Rhapsody, and all the joys and inspirations which no other art save music's ethereal rain can give. On some of the deserts where once he swallowed their bitter dust as he plodded forward he now sees irrigation projects so practical and yet so ideal that they charm the imagination with their wizardry as they spread their living waters upon the thirsty soils. He saw Arizona accomplish that difficult feat in Government of fusing reforms with stability. He has earned competence and popular affection, for he aided in building this empire.

THE OIL INDUSTRY—ADDRESS BY BAIRD H. MARKHAM AND AXTEL J. BYLES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech by Gen. Baird H. Markham, of my State, on the subject of taxation of gasoline delivered at the national convention of the American Petroleum Institute in Dallas, Tex., last fall.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAX EXTRAVAGANCE OR TAX JUSTICE?

Baird H. Markham

WHO WILL GET CONSUMER'S DOLLAR?

Contemplating the probable trends of taxation and legislation in the immediate future is productive neither of confidence nor comfort. The question as to who will get the consumer's dollar whether it be Government through taxation or industry through trade, is becoming a paramount issue.

Government has been attempting to restore trade activity by spending the citizens' money for them. Unfortunately, the mere restoration of trade activity has been found to be insufficient to maintain employment, fill pay envelops, meet dividend requirements, and finance overhead. Public attention increasingly has been called to the fundamental principles of reducing Government costs and reducing Government taxes, but the tax collector's hand plunges ever deeper into the taxpayer's pocket.

ONE HNUDRED AND EIGHTEEN OIL-INDUSTRY TAXES

So far as our own industry is concerned, the 117th and 118th taxes were imposed upon it last June by the Federal Government ostensibly to finance activities designed to assist in ridding it of the adverse effects brought about by the serious economic situation facing us, no small part of which was due to the first 116 taxes. Taxes levied upon the property, products, operations, and services of the petroleum industry in 1933 amounted to $1,004,824,028, while net earnings were only approximately $204,000,000, or about one-fifth of the tax bill. Total taxes upon the average barrel of crude oil and its derivatives now amount to an estimated $1.11. This figure may be compared with the Petroleum Administrative Board's recent report that the average market price of a barrel of crude has been 72 cents and the cost of production 80.6 cents.

REVENUES SHOULD FINANCE OTHER CONSUMPTION

The average taxpayer undoubtedly believes that the petroleum industry can afford to pay $1.11 taxes on a barrel of oil that costs 80 cents to produce and sells for 72 cents. His conviction blinds him to the fact that he himself pays 90 cents of that tax bill. Unfortunately for industry, the money that must go to pay tax bills might otherwise be used for additional purchases of all types of commodities.

Sales taxes upon the industry's principal income product, gasoline, still average more than 40 percent of the retail price. In some cases they exceed 100 percent. Government is using more and more of gasoline-tax revenues for purposes other than highways, and curtailing, rather than expanding highway programs. Enforcement of gasoline-tax laws has been improved, but there still is evasion. Undoubtedly, further increases in gasoline-tax rates will have to be combated.

LITTLE IMMEDIATE RELIEF

The immediate future offers nothing particularly hopeful in the field of legislation. The legislatures of 44 States will hold regular sessions in 1935. Some legislators are seeking the enactment of laws designed to create a semblance of order out of the competitive chaos in the petroleum industry. Others are sponsors for legislation having the effect, if not the objective, of imposing further handicaps upon us.

Suffice it to say here that our industry probably will not, in the very near future, obtain substantial relief from its billion-dollar annual tax bill, nor will it escape being made the target of much troublesome legislation. In both cases, maintaining the status quo may be considered a commendable accomplishment.

Government still considers itself in need of additional revenue. In the past few years it has learned that not merely millions, but billions, of dollars can be extracted from the taxpayers' pockets without provoking more than a mild protest. Reducing both the cost of government and of taxation may be obvious needs, but the theory that taxes can be shifted to industry still is as popular as it is fallacious.

We cannot escape the conclusion that if government insists upon competing with industry for the consumer's dollar, it must observe certain principles, including the law of diminishing returns. It must tax so lightly and so broadly as to avoid discouraging consumption and the consequent reduction of its own tax income.

MOUNTING GOVERNMENTAL COSTS

I am not speaking primarily of the Federal Government. Its expenditures have been enormous. Its costs have risen to new extremes. The Federal Government, by the very vastness of costs and expenditures, will be forced to give further consideration to the need of balancing budgets and of economizing. State, county, and local governments, however, have shown only an academic interest in either economy or balanced budgets.

Of the $1.11 estimated taxes upon the average barrel of crude oil, 78 cents represents the levies of State, county, and local governments. Only 30 percent is levied by the Federal Government. This proportion, about 2½ to 1, is generally true of all taxes. One wonders if the theory of regimentation might not be applied to taxation as well as to industry. Taxes certainly need to be kept in line.

State, county, and local governments seem still to be unimpressed by the fact that the taxpayer also is forced to meet economic emergencies. They may have noticed that he first eliminates luxuries and economizes on essentials only as a last resort, but they are not inclined to emulate his example. Such little economizing as has been done has been by way of curtailing essential services without handicapping the political usefulness of the nonessentials. Unfortunately, this policy serves the double purpose of perpetuating the more remunerative leaks in the Public Treasury, and misleads the public as to the necessity of reducing the cost of government.

RESISTANCE TO TAX REDUCTION

If you are inclined to believe I exaggerate in emphasizing the opposition of government to reducing its costs and the citizens' tax burden, let me direct your attention to efforts recently made in Michigan and Ohio to reduce and to limit, by constitutional amendment, the rate of taxes imposed upon motor vehicles and motor fuel. Michigan taxpayers were informed by State and county officials that they faced a catastrophe in reducing their taxes. In order to protect the taxpayers against themselves every legal and political trick was used—even to the extent of employing public funds to finance an opposition campaign and distributing falsified and misleading sample ballots.

In Ohio, where taxpayers similarly sought by constitutional amendment to reduce and to limit gasoline-tax rates and to prevent double taxation of motor vehicles, it was admitted that amending the constitution was the only means of tax reduction left to the taxpayers. But warning was given that only misfortune could result from public tampering with that sacred document.

Even the attempt to prevent the diversion of gasoline-tax funds to purposes other than highways in those two States was denounced and opposed. Apparently government need of money to spend is held paramount to the rights and the welfare of the citizens.

TAX FIGHT IN PUBLIC INTEREST

You may have gathered from my remarks that reducing taxes and government costs are matters which transcend the interests and the welfare of the petroleum industry. That is true. Our industry, in seeking reasonable tax rates and sound policies of taxation, is working not merely for itself but in the interest of the public and of good government. It is engaged in a constructive undertaking which, once the issues clearly are understood, will attract public support and ultimately win the approval of the more forward-looking government officials themselves. After all, it is as impossible as it is impractical for government to continue spending the taxpayers' money extravagantly and to continue raising tax rates and imposing new taxes to meet unnecessary costs.

HIGHWAYS A MAJOR COST

One of the major costs of government may be ascribed to highways. It is interesting to note that since 1919 the Federal Government has spent $1,522,000,000 on highways, and has collected from highway users $1,664,000,000 in various kinds of special taxes in addition to the other taxes levied upon them in common with other citizens.

In this period the States have spent approximately $10,500,000,000 upon highways, and have collected from highway users through gasoline and motor-vehicle taxes more than $7,200,000,000. Twenty-five additional special taxes are levied upon the highway users. Highway users in 1933 alone paid the huge sum of $1,137,872,000 in special motor-vehicle user taxes. These taxes will defeat their own ends, and will kill the pocketbooks if they do not first destroy the patience of the highway geese that lay the golden eggs.

The remedy for this situation is not the addition of taxes to taxes or the seeking of untaxed sources of revenue, but in cutting the cost of government. It is not too much to ask that government do willingly that which the taxpayers have been forced to do—economize.

SOUND ROAD PLANNING ESSENTIAL

Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent and are being spent by the Federal and State Gvernments for high-cost road construction where such high-cost construction is not needed. The funds thus unnecessarily expended should have been used to build country or marginal roads of low-cost construction which are badly needed in the rural communities. By surveying actual highway requirements, adapting paving to traffic needs, and measuring expenditures by potential tax returns, we could, by careful long-term planning, develop an adequate self-liquidating highway system financed by reasonable taxes paid proportionately by highway users. Our tangled highway-tax situation offers an unchallenged field of governmental planning as old as civilization itself. Sound governmental planning and economy along these lines would relieve the present inequities in the distribution of road funds, and would tend to stay the ever-rising tax tide.

SITUATION NOT HOPELESS

The immediate future of taxation and legislation, from our industry's point of view, is discouraging—but not hopeless. We now have a coordinated organization working in the interests of the public, and of the industry, in all except two States. The very existence of that organization will tend to discourage some legislative efforts further to tax and to handicap the industry. The work of that organization in opposing harmful legislation the moment it is introduced, and in making the industry's position immediately known, further will discourage these attempts. However, I wish to make it plain to you the industry cannot depend solely upon this, or any, organization. It must, upon occasion, draw upon its own recourses. Let me classify them for you.

OIL-INDUSTRY RIGHTS

First. The inherent right of this industry, constituted of American citizens, to have an opinion and to express that opinion.

Second. The right of this industry—in every legal and honorable way—to support legislation it regards as favorable or necessary and, similarly, to oppose legislation it believes to be unjust, unnecessary, or harmful.

Third. The industry's own personnel, consisting of roundly 1,250,000 workers, and roundly 4,000,000 more directly dependent upon them; in all, a vast army of 5,000,000 citizen taxpayers.

Fourth. The unalterable determination of the American citizen to protect himself, his job, and his salary.

Fifth. The frequent contacts of this industry, through its service stations, with more than one-fourth the entire voting population of the United States.

Sixth. The fact that the industry, producing commodities necessary to the welfare of almost every other industry and of practically every citizen, and consuming the products of most other industries, is an essential industry upon whose welfare the welfare of the large majority of all industries directly or indirectly depends.

PROBLEMS THAT UNITE US

Those of us engaged in the work of the petroleum industry may differ widely in opinion concerning some subjects; but, insofar as taxation and legislation inimical to the entire industry are concerned, we can, and must, be united. Furthermore, we must develop our own opinions and support our own efforts in these fields.

Too often, I fear, we have permitted ourselves to be sold on ideas and proposals which never were, and never could be, in the industry's best interest. Too often also Greeks bearing gifts endeavor to enlist the support of the industry for projects that can be of no possible benefit. Gasoline-tax rates were allowed to rise to unreasonable levels largely because many of us were sold on the idea that they would finance road building and so increase our market. Scores of other questionable promotional ideas constantly are placed before us, and our support asked—despite the fact that most of them can do us no possible good, and probably will do us much harm.

PRESENTING A SOLID FRONT

As to unity of thought in matters of taxation and inimical legislation, we urge that each of you, as individuals, and that your companies, as groups, seriously consider the advantages to be gained by presenting a united front. Occasionally our work is handicapped by the indisposition of some groups or individuals whole-heartedly to participate in State or National campaigns in the interest of the industry generally. All too frequently we hear expressions of fear of reprisals by public officials, loss of business, and the like. We can appreciate the position of those who take this stand, but I do wish to say that we merely work against our own interests when we permit the hope of temporary advantage to blind us to the certainty of ultimate and permanent loss.

OUR WORKERS AND THE PUBLIC

If cooperatively we are to work in the interests of the industry and of the public, we must not forget that all the workers of the industry have a right to share in such activities. As citizens and taxpayers, all of them are vitally interested. The great mass of the employees of the industry have only to be given a clear understanding of the situation to turn their interest into activity. We assure you that this group, and their dependents, representing some 5,000,000 citizens and taxpayers, can be a mighty effective force.

We cannot pass lightly over this matter of making certain that both the personnel of our industry and the public generally understand the situation and know our motives and objectives. It is human nature to have the most decided opinions upon subjects concerning which we know the least. And we can expect opposition both within the industry and without unless everyone understands just what we are trying to do and why. We ask your cooperation in the task of enlightening at least every worker in this industry. We ask your cooperation also in giving the public, through all of your contacts, an opportunity to understand and to act.

OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

Before concluding I should like to discuss briefly the subject of this industry's interest in and support of outside organizations. You have been generous in supporting this committee. It is trying to repay you by accomplishing at least a portion of the vast amount of work that must be done before this industry obtains tax justice and fair legislative recognition. We can only say that this organization is working with you and for you. We ask that, before participating in the activities of outside organizations, you consider how their program fits in with that which you, through this committee, are supporting.

Again we call to your attention that the tax and legislative situation confronting our industry is discouraging, but not hopeless. We look for the maximum of trouble during the coming year, with 44 State legislatures and a Federal Congress in session—and Government convinced that it must have new taxes and additional tax revenues. But if you will continue to give us your whole-hearted cooperation and support, and if you will do for yourself the things that can be done so advantageously by individuals and by companies, we are convinced that the future damage done to our industry will be the minimum.

This industry has everything to lose if meekly it accepts whatever is imposed upon it, and cravenly submits to unfair taxation and legislation that is not even in the public interest. It has nothing to lose if boldly and aggressively it asserts its rights, organizes itself and its employees for protection of those rights, and takes a definite initiative in seeking them.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY—ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address delivered over the radio on November 18, 1934, by the Postmaster General, Hon. James A. Farley, on the subject of Our Party's Responsibility.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR PARTY'S RESPONSIBILITY

Winning the election was the least of the tasks of the Democratic Party. Presently we must face the responsibilities brought by the victory of November 6, and then will begin the real test of capacity and patriotism.

What we have won is only an opportunity for service. What we have to do is to demonstrate our ability to take care of the most difficult problems that have ever beset this country. We must show that we are fit for the trust that has been given to us. If we do, the Democratic direction of our national affairs will continue indefinitely; if we do not, the people will not forgive us and will turn the Government into other hands. The unpardonable sin of an administration—any administration—is failure.

True, we have an unprecedented majority in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. We have been given the finest, most sweeping tribute of approval any American administration ever received. Nevertheless we are still on trial. The vote of confidence was in recognition of President Roosevelt's magnificent beginning of the work of reconstruction and recovery. The people recognized the cooperation he received from Congress and rewarded by reelection those Members for the most part who had helped, and penalized by discarding them the Members who sought to hamper and obstruct the President's program. Only in the sense that the majority voted under the Democratic emblem was it a party victory. As chairman of the Democratic National Committee, I am proud of the splendid work of our party workers in getting out the vote, in organizing and in presenting the issues of the campaign, but I fully realize that so many conspicuous Republican figures were not relegated to private life merely by citizens of my own political persuasion. Indeed, except for the willingness of millions of our people to subordinate party fealty to national welfare, I doubt very much if this would have been accomplished. The punishment they visited, for example, on Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania; Fess, of Ohio; Robinson, of Indiana; Hatfield, of West Virginia, and many others who had been prominent in the Republican Party, was due to the recognition that they had not been able to rise above partisanship in a great national emergency. I might mention that among the conspicuous figures that were rebuked in this manner were Congressman Fred Britten, of Illinois; Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania; and 10 other ranking Republicans on important House committees.

I do not mean to assume for an instant that all of these men were deliberately disloyal to their country. Doubtless some of them were quite sincere in their beliefs, but they had become so fossilized with reactionary principles that they were incapable of appreciating progress in economic thought.

They could see no virtue in any departure from the system that had been so good to them. It was really the struggle, as long as our history, between those who visioned prosperity as unstinted favor for the rich and powerful—on the theory that so much of this prosperity as was deserved would dribble down to the ordinary citizen—and the Jeffersonians, who hold that the common man is entitled to an equal share in the benefits of government.

Well, these archpriests of a bygone day have vanished from the political scene, leaving only a remnant of their order in either Chamber of Congress. The dream of the reactionary Republican high command of obtaining a third of the House of Representatives so that they might seriously obstruct the carrying out of the President's policies was dissolved by the election. That is what Chairman FLETCHER of the Republican National Committee had in mind when he issued his prophecy, on the eve of election, that his side would gain 60 to 70 seats in the House, instead of which we gained a dozen seats—something unheard of in the record of mid-term elections. Mr. Fletcher was figuring on the normal back-swing of these occasions, either not recognizing or unwilling to believe that this was no normal situation. It is in no spirit of criticism or ridicule that I cite this error of the opposition chief. We must take it for granted that he was blinded to the circumstance that the people felt they had given a job to President Franklin D. Roosevelt; that he was doing his job with sincerity and effectiveness; and that they had no patience with those who sought to balk or hinder his completion of his task.

Let nobody run away with the idea that the lesson of November 6 has put an end to the campaign against the President's policies. Every day we read of organizations having for their purpose interruption of the orderly processes of recovery. Some of these are radical, aiming at the enactment of wild legislation; more are reactionary. It seems to me that it is not improbable that both groups are financed from the same source, for both are calculated to alarm the country and to advance the idea that the Roosevelt administration is aiming at the redistribution of wealth, the elimination of the profit motive in business, unbridled inflation of the currency, and heaven only knows what other nightmare is being cited to shake the people's faith in their Chief Executive.

Of course, those who aim at the restoration of the old system of privilege do not admit their motive. They masquerade as defenders of the Constitution, as protectors of liberty, and all that sort of thing. They have no fear of their radical coworkers, for they know there is not the remotest chance of the crazy measures becoming law. But every ghost that can be raised adds to the impressiveness of their Halloween pageant.

Already the newly elected Congressmen are being solicited to sign pledges, more or less vague, which would enable these organizations to claim them as adherents and so make a showing of strength before or at the coming session. To these Congressmen-elect I would say that, in my opinion, a legislator who ties his own hands in regard to legislation on which he will vote is committing as great a sin as a juryman who goes into court pledged in advance to a particular verdict. His duty to his country is to keep his mind open, to preserve his freedom of judgment and his independence of thought, to the end that when he takes a position on any of the grave matters with which the coming Congress must deal he will vote as his conscience directs for the best interests of the people.

The responsibilities of the party in power cannot be exaggerated. The decisions of the coming Congress will be vital to the orderly continuance of our national institutions. We are getting along fairly well. Business is better by billions of increased income; our bank deposits are at the peak; our currency is stable; and our bonds rank among the highest securities in the world. All that remains to be done to make us again a happy and prosperous country is get unemployment back to normal figures. Sooner or later industry must absorb the men and women now out of work and those who are temporarily employed in Government projects. Then, and not till then, will the burden of direct relief be lifted from the Government's shoulders. We cannot, of course, permit people to starve. On the other hand, the Government cannot carry on indefinitely the support of such a multitude as is now on the relief rolls. How to get these people back into private employment is the problem of the industrialists even more than it is of the legislators. Business has shown its confidence in the President. Perhaps all that is needed now is that it should show confidence in itself. Such uncertainty as exists is translated into timidity, into supercaution in enterprise, and thus into stagnation of investment and business extension. It is peculiarly the problem of industry, because whether the cost of maintaining the unemployed is borne by the Government or not, inevitably the people as a whole must pay for it. In the last analysis the maintenance of these people is a charge on business, for whether that maintenance is done by direct charity or through the medium of taxes it is bound to be as much a part of your overhead as rent.

light, or power. It is the administration's job to see to it that the burden is equitably distributed, and, further, to take such steps as are necessary for gradually diminishing it, until at last it becomes as unimportant as it was in the days of our past prosperity when nobody noticed it.

We pledged our party to this duty in the campaign just closed. The vote of confidence is evidence that that pledge was accepted. Now we have to make it good, and I have no doubt that our majorities in Congress, of which I am so proud, will live up to that party's promise. Naturally they will be beset by enthusiasts who regard the new deal as the opening for those extreme measures which we label socialistic or communistic. Naturally they will be importuned by those who regard any departure from what has been done in the past as dangerous and unconstitutional radicalism. I do not imagine that anybody is much worried over the idea that the President's good old-fashioned horse sense will be missing from the administration's course in this situation.

There is no one less likely to overturn the apple cart than he. For nearly 2 years now he has conducted the affairs of his great office to the satisfaction of the people. He has been exposed at all times to the gales of conflicting opinion that will blow so fiercely about the coming Congress. The conservatives have clamored that he has arrogated to himself powers he should not have and that he was being swayed by theorists and economic visionaries. The liberals have been equally violent in their protests that he had stopped short in his policies and processes of what they deem the ideal government. He has listened to all of them but has yielded to none of them. He has kept his head and exercised his own wise judgment, based on years of experience in government and with a full perception of the consequences of his exercise of the powers conferred on him by the last Congress.

He has been accused of subjecting the legislative branch of the Government to his will, which is a silly accusation, for, while he has recommended much and generally had his recommendations sustained, he has dictated not at all. He had a plan, and Congress confirmed that plan in its essentials; and there is no reason to believe that the coming Congress will not cooperate with him as effectively as did its predecessor.

In a great measure the old Members have come back and the new Members of our vast majority are men of substance, of character, and are respected members of their Commonwealths. With few exceptions they were elected on platforms approving the President's policies. I feel quite safe in assuring this audience tonight that the Seventy-fourth Congress will not only be thoroughly appreciative of its responsibility to the party, but—what is of more importance—that it will realize and live up to its sacred obligations to our country.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives, which was read:

House Resolution 51

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the State of New York is represented in the Congress by 47 men and women. It so happens that we have just lost by death a Representative who has been here longer than any other Representative from the State, I think, with one exception, that exception being a man who was here a few days longer.

Representative GRIFFIN was known to all of us as a capable, energetic man, a fair-thinking man, a man of great capacity. His death is a great personal loss to me, and it is with great sorrow that I have learned of his passing.

I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read, and for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 54) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints as the committee on the part of the Senate the Senators from New York [Mr. COPELAND and Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. COPELAND. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 16, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1935

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Heavenly Father, who hast called us to a life of service in which are mingled joy and pain to the understanding of the soul's true weal, draw us closer at this moment to Thyself, as in reverent sympathy we draw close to him our friend and colleague, upon whom this unexpected shadow has so lately fallen.

Enfold him and those so near and dear to him in Thy sheltering arms of love; draw them closer to Thy mercy's breast; give them the strength and comfort of Thine own indwelling, the inward peace that passeth understanding, which the world can neither give nor take away, the peace of God, revealed through Him, who on the cross hath vanquished death and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life, Jesus our Savior and Redeemer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day, Tuesday, January 15, 1935, when, on request of Mr. ROBINSON and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE WORLD COURT (S. DOC. NO. 11)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

The movement to make international justice practicable and serviceable is not subject to partisan considerations. For years Republican and Democratic administrations and party platforms alike have advocated a court of justice to which nations might voluntarily bring their disputes for judicial decisions.

To give concrete realization to this obviously sound and thoroughly American policy, I hope that at an early date the Senate will advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the Protocol of Signature of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, dated December 16, 1920, the Protocol for the Revision of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, dated September 14, 1929, and the Protocol for the Accession of the United States of America to the Protocol of Signature of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, dated September 14, 1929, all of which were submitted to the Senate December 10, 1930.

I urge that the Senate's consent be given in such form as not to defeat or to delay the objective of adherence.

The sovereignty of the United States will be in no way diminished or jeopardized by such action. At this period in international relationships, when every act is of moment to the future of world peace, the United States has an opportunity once more to throw its weight into the scale in favor of peace.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1935.

EXECUTIVE ORDERS RELATING TO VETERANS' REGULATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 20, title I of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, I am transmitting herewith Executive Orders No. 6775 (Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (c)) and No. 6776 (Veterans' Regulation No. 8 (a)), approved by me June 30, 1934.

Executive Order No. 6775 amends Executive Order No. 6566 (Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (b)), January 19, 1934, and Executive Order No. 6776 effected the cancelation of Executive Order No. 6096, March 31, 1933.

These regulations were promulgated in accordance with the terms of title I, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1935.

LAWS AND RESOLUTIONS OF PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 19 of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands", I transmit herewith a copy of Act No. 4104, passed by the Ninth Philippine Legislature at its third session, and a set of the laws and resolutions enacted by the Ninth Philippine Legislature during its third special session, from April 30 to May 5, 1934.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1935.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR GENERAL OF THE PHILIPPINES (H. DOC. NO. 32)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 21 of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands", I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands for the calendar year 1933, together with appendixes, consisting of abridged reports of the heads of the six departments of the Philippine government for the calendar year 1933.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War that this report and its appendixes be printed as a congressional document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1935.

(NOTE: Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.)

GENERAL RULES AND REGULATIONS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISING INSPECTORS, STEAMBOAT INSPECTION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of the four classes of general rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors under the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, with supplements thereto for the years 1932, 1933, and 1934, and stating that the fifty-first supplement, covering the new boiler rules adopted by an executive committee of the Board of Supervising Inspectors and approved by the Secretary of Commerce, will be transmitted later, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF THE CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the vice president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the company for the calendar year 1934, with the results of the operations for the month of December estimated only, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Woman Citizens Union, of New Orleans, La., praying for the continuance of the investigation of munitions manufacturers, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Woman Citizens Union, of New Orleans, La., praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the city council of Cambridge, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing the immediate payment of the so-called " veterans' bonus ", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted at a labor mass meeting assembled at Rockland Palace, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street and Eighth Avenue, New York City, N. Y., condemning lynching and mob law, and favoring the enactment of antilynching legislation, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Marshall County, Kans., praying for the prompt passage of the so-called " Frazier-Lempke farm refinancing bill ", which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WAGNER. I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a memorial from the National Association of Letter Carriers, favoring the repeal of the salary reduction law affecting Federal employees.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A MEMORIAL FOR REPEAL OF THE SALARY REDUCTION AS AUTHORIZED IN TITLE II, SECTIONS 2 AND 3, OF THE ACT ENTITLED "AN ACT TO MAINTAIN THE CREDIT OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT", APPROVED MARCH 20, 1933, AS AMENDED BY THE INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION ACT, 1935

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress:

The National Industrial Recovery Act was based in large measure upon the sound economic doctrine that recovery is impossible unless the wage-earners possess abundant purchasing power. In the pursuit of this objective, the N. R. A. for a year and a half has sought to increase wages in private employment.

The Government had an excellent opportunity to furnish an inspiring example to private business, and so hasten recovery. By far the largest employer in the country, it was under a moral obligation to treat its workers as it insisted that private employees be treated.

The same Congress that enacted the N. R. A., however, slashed postal and other governmental salaries 15 percent. This unwise move, besides inflicting unnecessary hardships upon a large body of faithful civil servants, intensified the depression by reducing purchasing power. By furnishing the worst possible example to private employers, it encouraged general wage cutting, and made genuine cooperation in the recovery effort difficult to obtain.

Part of the injustice has since been remedied by the restoration of one-third of the cut as of February 1, 1934, and an additional third on July 1, 1934. A 5-percent pay cut still remains in effect, however, and will not expire, in the absence of congressional action, before June 30, 1935. The elimination of that cut and the restoration of full basic salaries as of January 1, 1935, is a simple act of justice that would improve living standards among Federal workers, encourage private employers to take similar action, increase the purchasing power of the workers, heighten the confidence of business men, and so provide an important impulse toward recovery.

The postal workers had suffered losses in real wages before the depression. By 1914 Prof. Paul Douglas, of the University of Chicago, showed that the real wages of postal workers were 9 percent less than in the nineties. The rise in living costs during the war caused a further sharp drop in their living standards, and as late as 1926 their real wages were still 4 percent below the level of the nineties. This was in sharp contrast with the gains made by workers in other industries. Since 1920, it is true, postal workers have made slight gains in real wages, due to a fall in the cost of living; but these gains have been far too small to compensate for the earlier losses.

In the meantime real hourly wages in other industries were advancing rapidly. By 1929 they showed a gain of 36 percent over 1913, as contrasted with a 2-percent in real postal salaries. In 1931, when a fall in living costs had made real wages of postal workers 17 percent greater than in 1913, real hourly wages of union workers in general were 79 percent above the same base year. There was no warrant, therefore, for reducing postal salaries because of the depression.

Nevertheless, the pay of postal workers was cut several times. The Economy Act approved June 30, 1932, furloughed letter carriers and other employees for 1 month without pay during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. This was equivalent to a reduction of 8⅓ percent of the annual salary. The act likewise suspended annual leave with pay and made conditions worse in other respects. Furthermore, an act approved March 20, 1933, imposed a pay cut based upon living costs and permitted a maximum reduction of 15 percent. This maximum reduction was in effect from April 1, 1933, to January 31, 1934. It is this cut, now limited to 5 percent, which is still in effect. In addition, postal workers were required during the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1934, to take payless furloughs totaling 11 days. The conclusion is inescapable that postal workers have borne far more than their share of the burdens of the depression.

The very real likelihood that prices will rise rapidly in 1935 requires the restoration of full basic salaries as of January 1, 1935. The cost of living has risen steadily since April 1933 and the various devices employed by the Government to raise the price level, plus the stimulus of reviving business, are expected to cause further increases in 1935. In the past postal salaries have lagged behind increases in the cost of living, and during the interval the standard of living of postal workers has suffered. There is no excuse for allowing that to happen in the first half of 1935.

The provision in the act of March 20, 1933, by which postal salaries in the period following were to be measured by the cost of living, is highly dangerous and utterly repugnant to the philosophy upon which wages should be based. Congress should at once end this plan of fixing salaries by price levels, and so making any gain in real wages impossible. Sound social policy, as well as the steadily increasing productivity of postal workers, entitles them to an advancing standard of living.

The sum necessary to restore postal wages to their full basic amount as of January 1, 1935, instead of waiting for the automatic restoration scheduled for June 30, 1935, is trifling, compared to the magnitude of current governmental expenditures. Whereas total Federal expenditures for the fiscal year 1931, for example, were only $4,219,950,339, by December 6, 1934, in a little over 5 months, the expenditures of the current fiscal year had already passed the $3,000,000,000 mark. Emergency expenditures have assumed huge proportions, with $1,568,627,403 being spent for such purposes between July 1 and December 4, 1934. The deficit no longer alarms the Government, for it recognizes that in a war on depression, as in a military campaign, the cost is not the controlling factor.

The current advance in business, moreover, has led to a widespread feeling of confidence that business conditions in 1935 will continue to improve. Nothing could better stimulate this confidence that a decision by the Government to restore the full basic salaries of its employees; and, conversely, the Government's failure to make this move would indicate that it expected hard times to continue and might therefore exert a serious adverse effect upon the business confidence so essential to recovery. It should be recognized, moreover, that mere confidence is of little consequence unless adequate purchasing power is available.

Nor can it be argued any longer that more adequate wage payments to postal workers are barred by a postal deficit. That argument never had any validity. Thanks to the sacrifices made by postal workers, however, there is now a postal surplus instead of a deficit.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the gross deficit was $112,374,892, and the net deficit $50,683,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, after the regular authorized adjustments for certain subventions and free mailing services had been deducted from a gross deficit of $52,000,000, the Department showed a surplus of $12,161,415. This was the largest surplus in the history of the Postal Service, with the single exception of that for 1918.

According to figures released by Representative ROBERT L. BACON, a member of the House Appropriations Committee, the Post Office Department during the fiscal year 1934 saved $65,000,000 through the pay cut, $11,000,000 through the furlough, and $4,000,000 by cutting allowances and suspending promotions. This represents total sacrifices by the postal workers of $80,000,000 during the year. It is evident, therefore, that the excellent financial showing of the Department has been made, for the greater part, at the expense of the living standards of the postal employees.

Reviving business has increased postal revenues and made the financial outlook of the Department brighter than for some time. Revenues in October 1934, for example, were approximately 11 percent greater than in the corresponding month of 1933. This tendency is expected to continue in 1935. Postal financial conditions, therefore, amply justify the restoration of full basic salaries as of January 1, 1935.

The impression must not be allowed to prevail, however, that postal salaries should be determined by the profit or loss experienced by the Post Office Department. A more fallacious argument could scarcely be advanced. The post office is a public institution, operated to serve the needs of the mailing public. It should not be judged by the standards commonly applied to business operated for profit, and the salaries of postal employees, in like manner, should not be determined by the balance sheet. In his book on United States Postal Policy, Representative Clyde Kelly, then a member of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, well expresses the right of the postal worker to "compensation which will enable him to support himself and his family on a standard of living worthy of his service in a vital public enterprise."

The minimum of justice to the great army of devoted postal workers requires the full restoration of basic salaries, effective January 1, 1935. The sacrifices made by postal workers during the depression, the likelihood that living costs will rise sharply in 1935, the current revival of business, the need for mass purchasing power and business confidence, the presence of a postal surplus instead of the usual deficit, and the right of loyal civil servants to an adequate and rising standard of living, all combine to make immediate pay restoration the least that the Government can do in fairness to the postal workers.

Respectfully submitted.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS,
COUNCIL OF ADMINISTRATION,
By M. T. FINNAN, National Secretary.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 55), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding after the paragraph reading as follows: "Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to consist of 17 Senators", a new paragraph reading as follows: "Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to consist of 17 Senators."

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ESTATE OF ELIZABETH PURTILL O'BRIEN

Mr. COUZENS. I ask unanimous consent to have the papers in connection with the bill I introduced in the Seventy-third Congress, known as "S. 3308", for the relief of the estate of Elizabeth Purtill O'Brien, a private claims bill, withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELECTRIC UTILITY BONDS AND THE INVESTING PUBLIC

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a remarkable report of the Federal Power Commission was transmitted to the President of the United States on January 10, 1935, by Vice Chairman Basil Manly. It deals with the present market values of utility bonds issued by operating companies in the United States as distinguished from the stocks and debentures of holding companies and investment trusts. It exposes the characteristic and misleading propaganda recently practiced by certain utility agents.

The report discloses that 121 issues of such bonds last November had a market value of more than $109,000,000 above the value of such bonds in September 1929, previous to the stock market crash of that year. It further shows by figures and an illustrative chart that the utility bonds of operating companies for which records are available during the last 15 years are today selling at the highest price for that period. The report serves to refute the gloomy intimations of private utility company agents that public operation of power and light plants has proven injurious to the investments of widows, orphans, and estates.

I ask unanimous consent for the publication of this report, including the accompanying illustrative chart, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as part and at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION,
NATIONAL POWER SURVEY.

To the PRESIDENT:

In response to your request there is submitted herewith report on the present status of public-utility securities held by life-insurance companies and savings banks:

INVESTMENTS PRIMARILY IN OPERATING COMPANY BONDS

The utility investments of standard life-insurance companies and savings banks are, and have always been, almost exclusively in the bonds of operating companies. They hold few preferred stocks and practically no common stocks. They have almost no holding-company securities of any kind. This is in accordance with State laws, which impose strict limitations upon the investments of such institutions, prescribing as legal only those regarded as safe and conservative.

The security portfolios of six large life-insurance companies in New York State (Metropolitan, Equitable, New York Life, Guardian, Home, and Mutual Life), having total admitted assets of $8,518,000,000, have been examined. These companies, as reported by the superintendent of insurance of New York, 1933, have invested in public-utility bonds $720,000,000, or 8.4 percent of their total assets. They have only $81,000,000 invested in public-utility preferred stocks, or less than 1 percent of their total assets.

Fifteen large life-insurance companies in other States have total admitted assets of $7,871,000,000, and have $753,000,000, or 9.5 percent, in public-utility bonds. They have only $64,000,000 in public-utility preferred stocks, or eight-tenths of 1 percent of their total assets.

These 21 companies combined have total assets of $16,389,000,000, representing 79 percent of the admitted assets of all the life-insurance companies in the United States.

These figures are in substantial accord with a report submitted at the twenty-seventh annual convention of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents (December 1933) showing that the investments of 51 legal reserve life-insurance companies in public-utility bonds comprised 8.6 per cent of their total assets. Less than 1 percent of the total assets were in utility preferred stocks and less than one-tenth of 1 percent in common stocks. These figures cover telephone, gas, street railway, and other public-service companies in addition to electric utilities. The actual investment of insurance companies in the electric-light and power industry is therefore somewhat smaller than shown above.

A recent bulletin of the Savings Banks Association of the State of New York (Dec. 7, 1934) states that less than 3 percent of the assets of such banks are invested in public-utility bonds and indicates that their investments in utility stocks are negligible.

In view of the fact that utility investments of life-insurance companies and savings banks are thus limited almost exclusively to bonds, inquiry has been directed primarily to determining the present market value of that class of securities as compared with other periods.

PRESENT MARKET VALUE HIGHER THAN IN 1929 BOOM

Comparison is first presented of the current price of public-utility bonds of the class held by life-insurance companies and savings banks with the prices prevailing at the height of the stock-market boom of 1929. This comparison shows that the average market price of such bonds is now approximately six points higher than in September 1929.

Out of 164 public-utility bonds listed as legal for investments of insurance companies and savings banks in the State of New York in 1929, quotations are available for both September 1929 and November 1934 for 121 issues. The average quotations for these 121 issues were:

|---|---|
| September 1929: | |
| Bid | 99.4 |
| Asked | 100.6 |
| November 1934: | |
| Bid | 106.0 |
| Asked | 106.7 |

Applying this average appreciation of 6.6 points in the actual bid price of a large list of representative bonds to the total public-utility bond holdings of the 51 standard life-insurance companies ($1,658,209,000 in December 1933), we find that their market value is now $109,441,000 higher than it would have been in September 1929, before the stock-market crash of that year.

OPERATING UTILITY BONDS NOW AT HIGHEST PRICE IN 15 YEARS

A longer range view of the market for electric utility bonds of the class held by insurance companies and savings banks is even more impressive. It shows that utility bonds of this class are today selling at the highest price they have realized in 15 years. The average appreciation of such bonds, for which records are available throughout the period, has been 32 points, or more than 40 percent.

Out of 161 public-utility bonds listed as legal for investments by insurance companies and savings banks in New York in 1934, there are 38 for which quotations are available back to 1920. These are issues of representative utility companies in every section of the country from Maine to California. The average bid and asked quotations of these 38 issues follow. All quotations are for the last week of November of each year.

| 1933 | 101.0 | 102.6 |
| 1934 | 108.9 | 109.7 |

These figures are graphically shown in the chart attached hereto (exhibit A). The detailed quotations appear in exhibit B.

The price trend for these 38 issues is fully confirmed by Moody's index for 10 public-utility bonds. This index shows a rise from a low of 76.38 in May 1920 to a high of 110.52 in December 1934.

UTILITY BONDS OF METROPOLITAN LIFE VALUED ABOVE PAR

In view of the concern expressed a little more than a year ago by Frederick H. Ecker, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., in a letter to George B. Cortelyou, president of Consolidated Gas Co., of New York, published in the New York Times of December 7, 1933, regarding the future security of public-utility bonds held by insurance companies, examination has been made of the present and past market value of the electric utility bonds held by that company. This examination shows that the average market value of such bonds is now above par and that they have enjoyed a material appreciation as compared with their value in September 1929.

Of the 217 electric utility bonds held by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. (report of superintendent of insurance, State of New York, 1933) quotations for 155 issues are available for both September 1929 and November 1934. The average quotations for these 155 issues were:

|---|---|
| September 1929: | |
| Bid | 97.2 |
| Asked | 98.8 |
| November 1934: | |
| Bid | 100.8 |
| Asked | 101.5 |

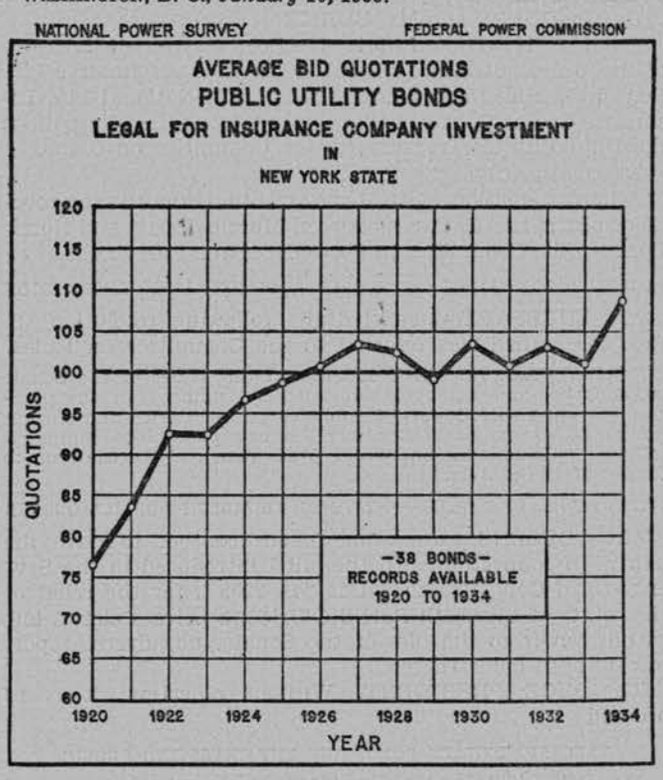
METROPOLITAN UTILITY HOLDINGS INCREASE $40,000,000

Unfortunately there is not available an exact list of the Metropolitan's utility holdings on December 7, 1933, when Mr. Ecker wrote Mr. Cortelyou. It is reasonable to assume, however, that the list of utility bonds and preferred stocks was substantially as reported by the New York superintendent of insurance for the year 1933. Using this list, we find that during the past year the average bid price for the public-utility bonds of the Metropolitan has increased 13.9 points and for the preferred stock 7.9 points. This is equivalent to $139 for each $1,000 bond and $7.90 for each share of preferred.

Applying these averages to the $339,000,000 par value of American public-utility bonds and to the $19,028,000 market value of utility preferred stocks held by the Metropolitan, it would appear that during the past year there has been an increase of more than $40,000,000 in the market value of that company's utility holdings.

It is worthy of note also that this increase was not due to any unusual gain in any particular security or group of securities. On the contrary, with the exception of one single issue maturing in 1935, every one of the 209 utility bonds for which comparable quotations are available increased in price during the past 12 months. Thirteen out of the 16 utility preferred stocks also showed a gain.

Within the last 6 months there have been several security issues by operating electric utilities on exceptionally favorable terms. The Edison Electric Illuminating Co. of Boston sold 2 issues of 3-percent 3-year notes totaling $55,000,000. The Consolidated Gas, Electric Light & Power Co. of Baltimore made an $18,000,000 issue of 3¾-percent bonds, and the Consumers Power Co. an $8,000,000 issue at 4 percent. The above interest rates indicate that investors retain complete confidence in the securities of conservatively capitalized operating companies.



CONCLUSION

In view of the above facts, it is clear that holders of life-insurance policies and depositors in savings banks have no cause for concern regarding the security of that part of the assets of such institutions invested in electric utility bonds. Widows and orphans and other beneficiaries of estates likewise are secure; provided the executors and trustees of such estates have conformed to the legal requirements which most States have established for such fiduciary officers, and have invested the funds intrusted to their supervision in the securities of operating companies and not in stocks or debentures of holding companies or so-called "investment trusts."

Respectfully submitted.

BASIL MANLY, Vice Chairman.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order under rule VIII. The first order of business will be stated.

The first order of business on the calendar was the bill (S. 396) to amend section 1180 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia with respect to usury.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT CLERKS TO SENATORS

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 39) submitted by Mr. BYRNES on the 10th instant, which had been reported back favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment to strike out:

That whenever during the remainder of the present session of Congress a Senator shall file with the Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a statement showing the necessity for an additional clerical assistant to enable him to discharge the duties of his office, such—

And to insert in lieu thereof " that each ", so as to read:

That each Senator may appoint one assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,500 per annum until the end of the present session of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the calendar.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, today marks the fifteenth anniversary of the eighteenth amendment. Thirteen months have passed since its repeal.

Within that time the evils of liquor and the liquor traffic have multiplied so rapidly as to call for the immediate return of national constitutional prohibition.

For instance, there are already more places where legalized liquor is sold in the United States today, only 13 months after repeal, than there were in the entire country at the time of the adoption of the eighteenth amendment.

The wets joined with us in denouncing the saloon. They said that it would not be permitted to return. They said they could not tolerate the idea of going back to the barroom of the days before prohibition. In fact, so general and so pronounced was this sentiment among the wets that it may be questioned whether a majority of them would have supported repeal if they had known it would result in the return of the saloon on a bigger and more devastating scale than ever. Where are those wet voices now? Where are those propagandists who mingled expressions of horror against the saloon with denunciations of prohibition?

In 1915, one of the last unrestricted wet years before prohibition, persons paying the Federal tax as retail dealers in distilled spirits for beverage purposes numbered 190,469, including keepers of saloons, drug stores, and other places licensed to sell distilled spirits at retail, and the number of retail dealers in fermented liquors was 13,740. In 1919, on the eve of national constitutional prohibition, war-time repression and other restrictions had reduced the number of retail dealers in distilled spirits to 107,851 and the number of retail dealers in fermented liquors to 4,628. During the national prohibition period retail liquor licenses to drug stores for medicinal purposes ranged in round numbers from 11,000 in the first year to 20,000 in the last year of that epoch. At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, 7 months after repeal, the Federal Government had issued 207,382 licenses for beverage purposes to retail dealers in distilled spirits and 230,322 licenses for such purposes to retail dealers in fermented liquors. These numbers include licenses to saloons, State stores, drug stores, hotels, restaurants, and other places licensed to sell distilled spirits or fermented liquors at retail.

From widely distributed areas come reports of saloons, taverns, cocktail rooms, tap rooms, and other new-fashioned drinking and liquor selling places in operation, running at all hours, resuming old alliances with gambling, gangsterism, prostitution, political corruption, crime in general, with girls as young as 16 for barmaids, with women frequently conspicuous among the patrons. The Newark Evening News recently said that it was disappointing that the legalized sale of liquor in numerous States, including its own, had brought back the old saloon, call it by any name we please; that it was even probable that those who promised the elimination of the saloon did so with their tongues in their cheeks.

The New York Herald Tribune has within the last 2 months quoted an official of a great hotel in the city of New York as saying that prior to prohibition on rare occasions only did one see unescorted women imbibing cocktails in the afternoon, but that since repeal at least 50 percent of the patrons had been women.

The Chicago Daily News said in October last that the tavern, under the new Illinois liquor law, retained all the evils of the old saloon and added new evils of its own; that the old alliance between the saloon and politics had been resumed; that every promise that after the restoration of the liquor traffic to legality the business would be made and would be kept respectable and law-abiding had been violated. That same publication also said a short time before that politicians faithless to the solemn pledges of both Democratic and Republican Parties had thrown open the door of the saloon in its State; that Chicago had been flooded with evil concoctions called whisky, that bawdiness and murder had followed; that the saloon was breaking the law and provoking lawbreaking; that it was promoting social insecurity and menacing the home; that police regulation had become a farce; that the saloon was the ugly progeny of liquor traffic greed and political bad faith.

The Albuquerque Journal said last month that when the sale of intoxicating liquor was legalized in New Mexico in 1933 the people were assured by the wording of the law itself that the open saloon, outlawed since 1918, would not return, that the plain intent of the legislature, shown in the wording of the act, was to permit the serving of liquor by hotels, restaurants, and cafes to its patrons with meals only, that the effect had been just the opposite; that barrooms, cabarets, and roadhouses had sprung up and were in blatant, brazen operation openly specializing in hard liquor, wine, and beer, jazz dancing, raucous orchestras, that drinking was permitted in dance halls, which the legislature plainly attempted to prohibit, minors finding it easy to buy drinks and consume them on the premises until they reached such a state of intoxication that they could not reach their cars at closing time without assistance.

With the repeal of the eighteenth amendment has come not only the open saloon, but an increase in the use of intoxicants, in the number of automobile accidents—fatal and otherwise—and in the number of drinking and drunken drivers.

The New York Times in a recent editorial points to what it terms an alarming increase in deaths resulting from motor accidents. It cites the latest report of the National Safety Council to the effect that in 1934 they reached a total of 36,000—an increase of 16 percent in a single year—showing that all the gain since 1931 had been wiped out. It adds that there is no indication of any halt in what it calls the " fresh upward curve." It states, further, that increased use of automobiles accounts for only a part of the growth in fatalities, that the number of motor vehicles registered in 1934 was practically the same as in 1933, gasoline consumption rising only 5 or 6 percent; that there has been a decided increase in the entry, " Driving while drunk ", on the police blotters in many States in recent months, and refers to a report from the Travelers Insurance Co. of Hartford to the effect that there has been an increase in 1934 over 1933 of 42 percent in the number of intoxicated drivers involved in automobile accidents and of 60 percent in the number of intoxicated pedestrians so involved. It is but fair to say that the editorial asserts that increased speed must also bear a large share of the responsibility for these fatalities. It should be added here that the report of the Travelers Insurance Co. referred to by this publication shows that a person was killed every 15 minutes and some injured every 31 seconds, on the average, in automobile accidents in 1934, making a total of at least 36,000 deaths and 900,000 injured during the first year of repeal—an increase of 16 percent over the number of deaths in 1933.

This means that deaths on the highways in time of peace and in the first liquor year since repeal, namely, 36,000, amounted to 72 percent of all American battle deaths in the World War during American participation—such deaths numbering 50,280. This means that injuries on the highways in the same period not resulting in death, namely, 900,000, were more than four times as many as battle injuries of nonfatal character to American soldiers in the World War during the time America took part—such injuries numbering 205,600.

Let us examine specific returns from various sections of the country. Manchester, the largest city of New Hampshire, reports 1,486 arrests for drunkenness during the last 12 months before repeal, and 1,953 arrests during the first 12 months of repeal, an increase of 31.4 percent. For the same periods before and since repeal arrests for driving while drunk in this city increased from 35 to 73, or 108.5 percent. On December 5, 1934, the commissioner of public vehicles reported that the permits of 744 operators had been canceled in New Hampshire during the first year of repeal, compared with 413 cancelations during the year before repeal, an increase of 80 percent.

The Boston Transcript in a recent issue quotes Chairman William P. Hayes, of the Massachusetts State Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission, as saying that this body is considering the withdrawal of liquor permits from all restaurants except the largest ones because drinking among young women has increased enormously—outrageously. He is also quoted by this paper as saying that the commission is considering an increase in the number of licensed liquor taverns from which women are barred by law.

Police figures for Boston for the year ending November 30, 1934, show 43,825 arrests for drunkenness, compared with 36,941 for the year ending November 30, 1933, an increase of 6,884, or 18.5 percent. They also show that the number of men arrested for drunkenness increased from 35,401 during the former period to 41,609 during the latter, or 17.5 percent, while the number of women so arrested grew from 1,540 to 2,216, an increase of 43.8 percent; that 114.3 percent more women and 17.7 percent more men were arrested for driving while under the influence of liquor during the latter than in the former period. Morgan T. Ryan, registrar of motor vehicles for Massachusetts, stated in September 1934, when automobile deaths in that State reached a total of 37 in 1 week, that this gruesome, cadaverous record was the worst story of auto tragedies ever known in Massachusetts; that it meant not only an average of more than 5 killings every day of the week but was 21 deaths more than those of the corresponding week a year before; that the total for the State fiscal year had risen to 633, a 13-percent rise over the preceding year; that no less than 32 different cities and towns had suffered the loss of inhabitants, old and young, with double deaths in 5 localities; that the two main factors in these accidents were speed and liquor.

Official figures from 13 cities in Virginia, which has the so-called "State authority plan", show an increase in arrests for public intoxication for the 4 months from June 1 to October 1, 1934, after the State stores began, as compared with the same period of 1933 under prohibition of 53.5 percent for Bristol, 46.4 percent for Charlottesville, 70.6 percent for Clifton Forge, 139.7 percent for Danville, 330.2 percent for Harrisonburg, 99 percent for Lynchburg, 151.2 percent for Newport News, 66.6 percent for Norfolk, 46.7 percent for Petersburg, 39 percent for Portsmouth, 59.3 percent for Richmond, 126.2 percent for Staunton. Hopewell reported a decrease of 40.7 percent. The average percentage of increase in arrests for intoxication in these 13 cities was 71.1 percent; for driving while drunk, 53.3 percent. In 11 of these cities from which reports were received the number of permits revoked for driving while drunk increased 47.7 percent.

Reports from police officials in seven cities of Pennsylvania, which also has the State authority plan, indicate the same trend toward an increase in intoxication and in driving while drunk. For the first 9 months of 1934, as compared with the same period of 1933, Allentown reports an increase of 26 percent in arrests for intoxication and of 30.7 percent in arrests for driving while drunk, Butler an increase of 62.5 percent in arrests for intoxication and no increase in arrests for driving while drunk, Chester an increase of 14 percent in arrests for intoxication and of 300 percent in arrests for driving while drunk, Harrisburg an increase of 8.8 percent in arrests for intoxication and of 25.8 percent in arrests for driving while drunk, Philadelphia an increase of 21.8 percent in arrests for intoxication and of 51.2 percent in arrests for driving while drunk, Reading an increase of 5.7 percent in arrests for intoxication and of 71.4 percent in arrests for driving while drunk, Wilkinsburg an increase of 12.3 percent in arrests for intoxication and of 200 percent in arrests for driving while drunk. Wilkinsburg also reported an increase of 40.5 percent in arrests for being drunk and disorderly for the same period in addition to the plain drunks.

Minneapolis reports 8,603 arrests for drunkenness in 1934, as compared with 7,678 in 1933, and 442 arrests for driving while intoxicated in 1934, as compared with 278 in 1933, an increase of 59 percent.

According to figures from the Washington, D. C., police department, the all-time record in automobile fatalities and injuries for this city was made under repeal in 1934, during which 135 persons were killed and 3,973 injured. During the previous year, 1933, the number killed in automobile accidents was 80. The first year of repeal showed an increase, therefore, of 68.75 percent in these tragic deaths.

Jail records for the District of Columbia show that in 1932 there were 8,430 commitments for intoxication, that in 1933 with beer legalized after April 7 these commitments rose to 11,618, that in 1934 under repeal they reached a total of 13,462.

In response to requests for information on the drunken driving situation from all over the State, E. Raymond Cato, chief, California Highway Patrol, compiled data based upon abstracts received from courts hearing cases on violations of the vehicle act, showing that in the first 9 months of 1934, 2,759 intoxicated drivers and 474 intoxicated pedestrians were involved in motor-vehicle accidents, as compared with 2,341 intoxicated drivers and 294 intoxicated pedestrians involved in such accidents during the same period in 1933. In actual practice, a number of cases in which liquor was involved would not appear in these figures. Very often traffic officers prefer a charge of reckless driving, noting usually, but not always, that the violator had been drinking.

The United States Bureau of the Census reports that the annual death rate for 86 cities of this country with a population of 37,000,000 was 11.3 percent per thousand of said population for the first 46 weeks of 1934, as against a rate of 10.8 for the same period of the previous year. The death rate from automobile accidents in these cities for the first 46 weeks of 1934 was 23 percent per 100,000 of the population as compared with 21.2 percent for the same period of 1933.

A recent report of an investigating committee of the Texas State Senate reveals liquor conditions in that State of most revolting character, a situation I predicted in my Texas campaign for the eighteenth amendment would follow repeal not only in Texas but throughout the Nation.

We were told that repeal would eliminate the bootlegger. The Director of the Federal Alcohol Administration has told us since repeal that so far as the liquor traffic is concerned the United States is living in a fool's paradise and that the bootleg trade is still with us. And yet we were told that prohibition was the cause of bootlegging and thus became a breeder of all crime, that the effort to prohibit made people want to drink, to violate the law, and that thus a spirit of lawlessness was let loose, expressing itself in crimes of many kinds. It was the favorite claim of the patron of the bootlegger in prohibition times that prohibition was making him a criminal. And yet, more than a year after repeal, the bootlegger and his clients are still functioning. The buyer from the bootlegger who charged that prohibition made him drink must now find some other excuse for his disregard of law and continued support of an outlaw trade. And those who denounced prohibition as one of the principal sources of crime must find some other explanation for the contempt of law and its increasing violation which surround us today on every side 13 months after repeal.

At this point note the reasons which the recent Budget message gives to Congress for the request for additional appropriations for law enforcement and crime repression during the next fiscal year, the year beginning June 30, 1935. On page 426 of this message it is stated that on account of the anticipation that there would be a considerable decrease in prison population following the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the expiration of the sentences of prohibition law offenders material reductions were made in appropriations for penal and correctional institutions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935. And then the message says that present indications are, however, that there will be no decrease in the number of prisoners, and that not only will the reductions in appropriations have to be restored but that further funds will be required because of the advance in commodity prices. A request is then made for an increase of $2,789,445 in the appropriation for the Department of Justice, $1,646,872 of which is for penal and correctional institutions. The message also requests an increase of $3,678,738 for the Coast Guard in the Treasury Department, stating that the appropriation for this service for the present fiscal year, the year ending June 30, 1935, was considerably reduced on the assumption that smuggling would diminish to a large extent. The message then adds that this situation has failed to materialize, and that it will be necessary to provide a deficiency appropriation for this service. This means, of course, that the rum-runner is again infesting our waters more than a year after repeal. Before May of last year the Coast Guard was allotted funds from the Public Works Administration to purchase 27 new seaplanes and amphibians, and it was anticipated that it would take over 14 land planes from the Customs Bureau and 6 Navy planes. This would make a total force of 61 planes as against 14 theretofore.

In the light of facts now developing, how rapidly are the old arguments against prohibition losing force? Take the cost of prohibition, against which the wets so bitterly complained, and compare the cost of protecting the legal liquor seller against his illicit competitor in what is only the beginning of repeal. The appropriations for the Government unit specifically charged with the enforcement of prohibition amounted to less than ten millions a year to and including 1926. In fact, the largest sum ever provided for the Bureau of Prohibition and the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol was appropriated in 1932, when they together expended $15,547,444.66. And yet the present Alcohol Tax Unit, charged with administering the Federal Liquor Tax Act of 1934, received an appropriation of $14,311,974 for its first year.

Take the question of revenue. How woefully the American people were misled! Mr. Jouett Shouse, president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, was reported in the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., of September 14, 1933, as estimating that the total Federal revenue from the sale of beer, wine, and spirits in the 17 States that were wet and which contain 48 percent of our population would reach $1,236,547,690, while others later made predictions of $700,000,000 and $800,000,000. Professor Seligman's estimate, if I remember correctly, went as high as $1,500,000,000. The Bureau of Internal Revenue has recently issued a statement showing that the total internal-revenue receipts from liquor taxes during the calendar year 1934 amounted to $374,506,232.50. But whether the amount is three hundred and seventy-four millions or Mr. Shouse's billion two hundred million or Professor Seligman's billion and a half, or whether it runs into infinity, it would never compensate for the wrecked manhood, the debauched womanhood, the ruined souls the mills of the liquor gods grind out so mercilessly through the years.

Take the experience of the State of Pennsylvania. When its State liquor monopoly went into effect on November 29, 1933, the legislature was so enthusiastic over expected liquor revenues from the State stores that it appropriated $20,250,000 for unemployment relief, $4,000,000 for old-age assistance, and $1,310,000 for pensions for the blind, a total of $25,560,000, all to be paid from the profits anticipated from the State-operated liquor business. The financial statement issued by the State liquor control board as of September 29, 1934, showed a net profit to that date of $3,245,197.59, of which the Governor allocated $1,500,000 for unemployment relief and $598,000 for pensions for the blind. I assume he included some of the wet estimators among the blind.

In the campaign for repeal much emphasis was laid upon the argument that Congress would enact and maintain legislation to protect dry States and localities from importation in violation of local law. This promise was written directly into the twenty-first amendment, which was ratified by the people and is now a part of the Constitution. The second section of that amendment provides that the transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

This section imposes a constitutional obligation on Congress to protect States and localities desiring to prohibit the liquor traffic. Although Congress took immediate steps to provide for the collection of excise taxes on intoxicating liquors, it has done nothing to meet, and has ignored for 13 months, the obligation imposed upon it by the ratification of the twenty-first amendment, and this despite the most solemn promise given when repeal was under consideration that the dry States would be protected. The only action taken by Congress in reference to liquor matters in dry States was the repeal by the Liquor Tax Act of 1934 of section 5 of the act of March 3, 1917, enacted before national prohibition, which prohibited the use of the United States mails for the circulation of newspapers containing liquor advertising in dry States. The result is that today newspapers containing liquor advertising and radio programs financed by liquor interests praising the merits of various types of alcoholic beverages are being sent directly into the homes of citizens in dry States, despite State policy evidenced by State constitution and laws.

Such is a partial outline of the record of the liquor traffic for practically the first year of its restoration. Brief as this outline necessarily has been, it is sufficient to give some idea of what that restoration means for our country. It means that integrity in government, soundness in morals and in health, safety of life, respect for law, internal peace and order, and allegiance to the nobler principles of human conduct will be imperiled to an ominous degree unless our weapons are resharpened and reemployed for the destruction of that traffic.

Most effective among those weapons are example, law, and education. The immediate development of conditions far worse than those obtaining under the eighteenth amendment is the answer to the propaganda which undermined it. Experience has demonstrated that education and example are helpless against an organized and powerful evil such as the liquor traffic without the penalties and decrees of law. This fact is now being impressed with new emphasis on the American people as they see fatalities due to speed and liquor multiplying on the highways in time of peace at a rate approaching that of war—as they see injuries short of death exceeding those of combat; as they see crime striking at the foundations of society to an extent never before approximated; as they see drinking places in numbers greater than in any period of the past crowded with both sexes and with young and old challenging all that is decent in America; as they see bootleggers, rum runners, gamblers, gangsters, and corrupt officials now racing back in greater force than has ever yet been known, to plague and curse mankind once more.

LET'S STOP THE WAR MAKERS—ARTICLE BY SENATOR BONE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the McFadden Weekly of October 27, 1934, entitled "Let's Stop the War Makers", by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE].

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From MacFadden Weekly, Oct. 27, 1934]

LET'S STOP THE WAR MAKERS—GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF MUNITIONS PLANTS WOULD PUT AN END TO INCENTIVE NOW CAUSING HIGH-PRESSURE METHODS OF SELING ARMS, SAYS SENATOR BONE, OF WASHINGTON

(By U. S. Senator HOMER T. BONE, Member of the Senate Munitions Committee)

How can the private munitions business be controlled? Manifestly some method must now be devised to meet a condition which most thoughtful citizens consider the outstanding menace to world peace. If the ominous signs all about us are a true index of world trends, then we are rapidly heading toward another frightful explosion. If the frank statements of many witnesses who have so far appeared before the Senate Munitions Committee in Washington are to be believed, the next war will involve civilian populations in a mass slaughter that will demoralize them and hoplessly involve all our social institutions.

The covenant of the League of Nations recognized the great dangers inherent in private control over what seems clearly to be a purely governmental function—preparation for war. When the League was formed its charter contained the assent of signatories to the proposal that "manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections."

Later, and in 1921, a subcommittee of the League considered the matter of private manufacture of munitions of war and reported that armament firms had been active in fomenting war scares and persuading governments to adopt warlike policies and increase armaments; that these firms had attempted to bribe Government officials, had disseminated false reports concerning the military and naval programs of various countries in order to stimulate armament expenditures, and had organized international armament trusts through agreement among themselves in order to increase the price of munitions.

The present Senate inquiry is proving these 1921 charges with a vengeance.

We are faced with the necessity of finding a practical answer to this bold challenge to our civilization. Manifestly moral suasion will not work. When men are made into multimillionaires in a few months in this sordid racket, mere argument about the unhappy nature of their business will not curb their activities. Ethical considerations find a resting place in the wastebasket. Witnesses before the Munitions Committee were very candid and told the committee that "so long as a chance to make money is in this game we are going to take advantage of the opportunity."

The private-profit motive is overwhelming and seems to have submerged practically all other considerations. To be sure, a few of the witnesses indulged in generalities about "patriotism" and made references to "national defense." In my judgment, enough evidence has already been produced to convince the American people beyond any reasonable doubt that the dominating and outstanding reason for the existence of a private munitions business lies in the enormous profits flowing to men who sell the instrumentalities of death.

In dozens of laboratories in this country, of whose existence American people are in entire ignorance, men work day after day with retort and test tube in a never-ending effort to improve the technique of mass murder. From these laboratories come death-dealing instrumentalities, which will make the next war more horrible. And from the activities of these men will flow great fortunes for a few—a new crop of multimillionaires whose fortunes will find root in blood and tears of the whole Nation.

In groping about for an answer to this grievous problem many of the major groups of this country have almost instinctively hit on the only practical answer. The most effective way to get at this problem in an intelligent way is to take the profit out of war and the preparation for war. Increasing millions of American citizens are beginning to realize the truth of this stubborn fact. There is only one way to take the profits out of this business. That is for the Government to exclusively manufacture all of its own munitions and instruments of war. In no other way will it be possible to curb the greed of men whose activities now threaten the peace of the world. It is the only answer to this ominous threat against national stability and social safety, and I believe that the American people will agree with me that these must be preserved at any cost.

TAKING PROFIT OUT OF WAR

This proposal does not carry with it the necessity of Government ownership of the sources of raw materials such as iron mines, steel plants, and the like. It simply means the exclusive manufacture by this Government of the recognized instrumentalities of actual military and naval combats. It implies only the manufacture of the actual war instrumentalities from raw materials purchased by the Government in the open market from those sources of supply best able to provide these raw materials.

It is only in the last stage—that is, the actual putting together of the materials in final form for actual combat—that the Government need establish a complete monopoly. This form of monopoly is, in my judgment, absolutely essential if we are to escape the payment of a frightful penalty in the years that lie ahead.

Quite naturally those who have a big stake in the large profits in this queer business are greatly concerned over such proposals. Some of them find a refuge in flowery utterances about patriotism and denounce the proposal as "an assault on our form of government" and one calculated to interfere with a proper preparedness program. The people of America are going to hear a lot of this sort of argument from now on and it will come from men who have so far enriched themselves out of this sordid business that they are numbered among the wealthiest citizens of the world.

How can such a proposal interfere with preparedness?

Certainly the Government can make all the munitions it needs in its own plants and arsenals. Under the lash of questions, private munitions manufacturers who appeared before the Senate Munitions Committee were compelled to admit that this was a vague and untenable argument since it was obvious to everyone that all the Government need do to manufacture the requisite amount of munitions was to expand its present facilities. No one was bold enough to deny that this could be done.

Such discussion as took place between committee members and witnesses concerning this matter finally developed the other argument which is so frequently heard to the effect that the Government will not be as efficient as the private manufacturers. While the whole proposal practically simmers down to a question of the relative efficiency of the public and private plants, one of the largest manufacturers of munitions for war broadly intimated that it might be immoral and unpatriotic for the Government to manufacture its own war munitions. He frankly stated that it would require some time for him to determine whether or not public building would be unpatriotic or socially immoral.

MENACE TO WORLD PEACE

If the munitions inquiry has developed any one fact it is that the private munitions maker is determined that the Government shall keep out of this highly profitable field and permit exclusive private exploitation. They do not want private profits disturbed. This argument is so untenable and so antisocial that society must of necessity reject it as utterly unsound and a menace to world peace.

The argument that exclusive Government manufacture of war munitions is an attack on preparedness is so stupid that it falls of its own weight. It is as ridiculous as the assertion that the people of a city are against electricity because they prefer a municipal power plant to an Insull power plant.

A city can manufacture electricity quite as well as Sam Insull. It is not necessary for a city to own manufacturing plants where wire, generators, water wheels, and steam equipment are made in order to go into the power business. It simply buys these items from houses that make them.

The important aspect of this comparison between the power business and the munitions business lies in the fact that when a city has purchased these materials and builds it own power plants and distribution system it thereafter controls the last and most vital process in the whole electric field—the production and distribution of electric energy. And in that form of control lies the very heart and soul of the whole power problem of this country.

It is this principle that I hope will be applied to the production of war munitions. It effectively answers the argument of munitions makers and other allies that the Government must go into all sorts of business in order to control its munitions business. The Government can control the last and final stage, which is the manufacture of actual munitions in finished form by doing this last and essential and controlling work in its own plants. And in so doing, it controls the very heart and soul of the munitions business.

ARMS SHIPMENTS DISGUISED

There will remain the further problem of social control over munitions manufactured in this country for export. The foregoing observations apply to war materials for use by this Government. It has been suggested, and I think wisely, that private manufacture of all kinds of war munitions for export can be effectively controlled by a system of licenses granted by the Government under conditions which require the most complete publicity for all such activities.

At the present time war munitions are shipped out of this country without check or hindrance, and these shipments are frequently disguised as to their character. Munitions makers of this country all profess to be very anxious to work in complete harmony with our War and Navy Departments, and some have even suggested that they have submitted their foreign orders to these Departments for security, if not tacit approval.

One huge concern proudly boasts that it maintains close and friendly relations with our Government, that it has become almost a semiofficial arm of the Government. It has been suggested that this relationship is founded in a desire of the owners to do a patriotic service for the Government by keeping the Government in close contact with all extraterritorial activities of this private company.

Manifestly, any form of regulation or control over the private manufacture of war munitions for export should be so rigid and inflexible in character as to require a form of publicity which goes far beyond that exercised over other forms of private business. As a very minimum of requirement, such companies, if permitted to manufacture for export, should be required to advise certain designated agencies of the Government of the exact nature of such shipments, with the names of the consignees, and these reports should be available at all times and at very frequent intervals to the Congress of the United States.

In other words, if that form of business is to be permitted, it should exist only in the white light of complete publicity. I am fully aware that millions of patriotic Americans believe that the entire munitions business should be completely nationalized and private manufacture of war munitions absolutely forbidden. In the interest of social safety it may be necessary that this be done.

THE HERITAGE OF WAR

The people of this Nation have a right to know all of the facts about the munitions business. It directly affects them in their business and their property. The battle to take the profits out of war and of preparation for war should receive the enthusiastic cooperation of every father and mother in this Republic. The suggestion I have made would do away with the necessity of trying to capture the shocking and outrageous profits such as were made by war profiteers in the last war. The staggering burden of debt which now hangs over us is the heritage of that war. It is a grim reminder of what will happen to us in another war. That debt now constitutes an almost insurmountable obstacle to national recovery. About 75 percent of our normal Government income is devoted to paying off the cost of past and prospective wars.

That dismal fact should make us doubly anxious to suppress the inciters to more wars. I fully share the fears of one of the outstanding defenders of private profits in war materials who recently bluntly told the Munitions Committee that if we have another great international conflict our civilization as it now exists will perish.

Certainly when our Western civilization is at stake we cannot afford to longer trifle with a business whose subterranean activities have brought down upon it the just condemnation of thoughtful and patriotic citizens. It is my solemn judgment that if we take the profit out of war and preparation for war we shall have taken the first great step toward a lasting international peace, and we will have done all that can be done in that direction to preserve the coming generation from the horrors of another great conflict.

CONTROL OF LIBERTY LEAGUE—ARTICLE FROM NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York World-Telegram under date of January 9, under the heading "Liberty League Controlled by Owners of $37,000,000,000."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the New York World-Telegram, Jan. 9, 1935]

LIBERTY LEAGUE CONTROLLED BY OWNERS OF $37,000,000,000—GIANT CORPORATIONS REVEALED AS PUSHING FIGHT UPON RADICALS—UNITED STATES STEEL, GENERAL MOTORS, STANDARD OIL, CHASE BANK, GOODYEAR TIRE, ETC., ALL HAVE MEN ON COUNCIL CRUSADING FOR LIBERTY

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press

WASHINGTON, January 9.—The American Liberty League, a nonpartisan society created to oppose radical movements in the National Government, was shown today to be under control of a group representing industrial and financial organizations possessing assets of more than $37,000,000,000.

A United Press survey of the league's new executive committee and advisory council disclosed a close connection between members and some of the Nation's greatest business enterprises.

League directors were shown to have affiliations with such organizations as the United States Steel Corporation, General Motors, Standard Oil Co., Chase National Bank, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the Mutual Life Insurance Co., and scores of others.

A study of corporation and financial statistics showed that of the 20 men and women who will constitute the league's executive committee, 13 are officers or directors of organizations with assets of more than $14,000,000,000.

On the executive committee are Alfred E. Smith, former Presidential candidate and Governor of New York; Irénée du Pont, head of the huge Delaware powder concern; John W. Davis, former Democratic Presidential nominee; and A. A. Sprague, Chicago industrialist.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIX ON ADVISORY COUNCIL

Some of the corporations of which committeemen are directors and their total assets:

American Telephone & Telegraph Co., $3,078,568,666; General Motors Corporation, $1,183,674,005; Armour & Co., $356,179,450; United States Steel Corporation, $2,102,896,880; Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, $1,131,089,858; E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., $605,631,064; Chicago & North Western Railroad, $857,751,940.

The league named 156 men and women as members of its advisory council. Included were men who are serving as directors of a variety of organizations, including banks, railroads, investment houses, public utilities, and manufacturing concerns.

LIST OF ASSETS

Assets of some of the institutions represented by council members:

United Light & Power Co., $572,658,684; Illinois Bell Telephone Co., $326,153,423; Shell Union Oil Co., $657,609,898; Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., $990,061,283; Central Hanover Bank of New York, $696,913,634; First National Bank of Chicago, $643,114,767; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, $1,220,833,814; Bethlehem Steel Corporation, $649,388,274; the Pullman Co., $276,555,754; Great Northern Railway, $851,424,768; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, $680,464,026.

JERSEY CORPORATION NAMED

Missouri Pacific Railroad, $664,947,552; Anaconda Copper Mining Co., $692,430,089; Erie Railroad, $625,505,049; Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, $345,624,377; Bankers Trust Co. of New York, $737,202,420; United Gas Improvement Co., $345,460,440; American Can Co., $203,004,550; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, $309,951,133; Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., $198,736,506; Phelps Dodge Corporation, $345,224,448; and the New York Trust Co., $310,432,263.

Among prominent members of the council were Pierre S. du Pont, Edward F. Hutton, Henry B. Joy, Alvan Macauley, Grayson M.-P. Murphy, John J. Raskob, Elihu Root, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., E. T. Weir, Joseph E. Widener, and Hal E. Roach.

Many of the league's staff were listed as officers or directors of a dozen more banks and industrial concerns

N. R. A. CODES—LETTER FROM E. B. BARTLETT

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from one of the leading industrialists of the State of Wisconsin commenting upon the operation of the codes of fair business practice under the N. R. A. While his comments are not in all respects favorable to the operation of such codes, the letter presents a viewpoint which I think is very interesting and instructive.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., January 11, 1935.

Hon. F. RYAN DUFFY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: One of the most serious problems for settlement in Washington is the future of the codes and the entire N. R. A. set-up. As we see the picture, we have never obtained great value from the code work, except from the fact that study of codes and adoption of codes has forced each manufacturer to a more careful study of his own situation and with his competitors. We have gained greatly from the standpoint that the chiseling manufacturer who was able to underpay his labor and pursue dangerous practices has been forced to a better appreciation of proper ways of doing business. It is our opinion here that N. R. A. should not be discontinued. We think it very valuable from the following standpoints:

Firstly. There is no question that minimum labor payments are a good thing during a depression. This prevents the unscrupulous business man from forcing the labor rates of his more scrupulous competitors down below a minimum below which it should not go. Such a minimum should be reasonably low, but an actual minimum that can be enforced.

Secondly. Maximum hours. We are not so sure here that the maximum-hour provision of the code is a good thing. We think it desirable as a temporary measure to help unemployment, but not proper after the emergency is over. The emergency is not past, although it is much less severe.

Thirdly, the N. R. A. should continue to be the tie between business, labor, and government. The various national policies affecting business and labor and the country in general are so vital to all of us that these problems should be studied constantly by a Government unit. The effects of the tariff on business is very vital. We feel here that the N. R. A. should be continued for the above reasons.

Fourthly, as far as price fixing is concerned, that is a field in which various experimentations must be continued. There is no question that vicious price cutting in certain fields has raised havoc in those fields. We, ourselves, feel that posting of prices and publishing minimum prices is one of the best ways to solve the entire pricing problem. If every individual manufacturer is forced to post his price list and any change in that price list a few days or a week or two before he makes the change, he would very often think twice before he would change his price list, and the stability of the entire structure would be improved tremendously. Most price cutting comes under the stress of high-pressure buying, and some of it is regretted the next day. The greatest advantage in the code work, as far as price is concerned, results from the necessity in most of the codes of the manufacturer publishing his price list and only making changes upon a reasonable notice. As far as definite price fixing by Government is concerned, that is such a tremendous problem that we, ourselves, hardly recommend it.

Now, my dear Mr. DUFFY, I was asked by some friends of mine to give our position on the future of N. R. A., and I have tried to do this without going into great detail. I trust that the facts given here are worth while.

Yours very truly,

MILWAUKEE STAMPING CO.,
Per E. B. BARTLETT, President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

NOMINATIONS WITHDRAWN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States withdrawing sundry nominations in the Army, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(For nominations this day withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

RESERVATIONS TO WORLD COURT RESOLUTION OF ADHERENCE

Mr. JOHNSON submitted four reservations intended to be proposed by him to the resolution of adherence on the part of the United States to the World Court protocols, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Copeland | Lewis | Robinson |
| Austin | Costigan | Logan | Russell |
| Bachman | Couzens | Lonergan | Schall |
| Bailey | Cutting | Long | Schwellenbach |

| Capper | Hatch | O'Mahoney | Walsh |
| Caraway | Hayden | Pittman | Wheeler |
| Clark | Johnson | Pope | White |
| Connally | Keyes | Radcliffe | |
| Coolidge | King | Reynolds | |

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of certain Senators as announced by me a few moments ago, and ask to have that announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence, as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, this day has been of singular significance to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. It is of singular consequence to me, sir, too. This day is the twenty-first birthday of my older grandson, and, Mr. President, I cannot do better by him in whom my affections center nor for those situated as he is throughout this land than on this day to dedicate my poor efforts and my limited talents to the endeavor to preserve the traditional policy of the American Republic and to keep this country free and independent in its every action in regard to other nations.

I speak, Mr. President, not as a citizen of the world; I speak as a citizen of the United States. With that I am quite content, and speaking thus, sir, I speak with the philosophy that has ever been mine during my political life, the philosophy so well expressed in the words of Abraham Lincoln:

> I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true; I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right, stand with him while he is right and part with him when he goes wrong.

So, Mr. President, today I stand where I have stood during the entire political life that has been mine. I stand where I stood in 1918, in 1919, and in 1920, and where I have stood every minute since that time. I stand here, sir, quarreling with no man for his views as to our international relations. I stand here critical of none in this body. I stand here, though, sir, even though I be a little lonely now—I stand here representing the same spirit that I endeavored to represent many years ago and that in all the succeeding time I have represented as best I could here and in this Nation.

Mr. President, a matter of transcendent importance today comes before us. It will not do, sir, either by pronunciamento or otherwise to belittle what is now before us. It is nonsense to say to me that what we do is of little moment and small consequence, because the implications that arise from this action of ours today are implications which may bode ill for the future of the American Republic. Believing thus in every fiber of my body and believing it, sir, with every throb of my heart, I cannot do otherwise than present as best I may, within my very marked limitations, to this body and, although it may not carry far, to the people of this Nation what today is being sought and what, if accomplished, it may mean to the American people.

Mr. President, we are asked now to join the League of Nations Court. We are told that we have delayed action for so long that the Senate has been engaged in some reprehensible practices and is open to the caustic criticism of every internationalist there is upon the face of the earth. I deny it, sir. The Senate needs no defense at my hands at all. The Senate, indeed, ought to be unto itself sufficient for its defense under any and under all circumstances. I recognize the faults that may exist here; I recognize that there are times when all of us, if disposed, may indulge in all sorts of criticism concerning our action as a body, and all sorts of criticism, perhaps, concerning some individual activities; but, Mr. President, after all, this is the last free forum there is upon this earth; after all, speak of it as you will, denounce it as you wish, refer to it, if you please, in such language as the internationalists refer to us throughout this land, term it what you may, sir, this Senate of ours stands the bulwark of American principles, and it is the last place where people may look for the protection of their rights and the security of their liberties.

This Senate is just that; and so, Mr. President, I resent the criticism that has been leveled at the Senate by those who are citizens of the world, and who no longer are content with being merely Americans. When they tell us that we are responsible for the delay in regard to entry into this nefarious contraption abroad, I answer they are responsible, and their allies abroad, and not ourselves.

It was in 1926 when erroneously the Senate gave adhesion to the protocols of the League of Nations Court. It adhered to them with reservations which were the irreducible minimum of protection that should be accorded our country in entering that tribunal. Ever since 1926 all that was necessary to be done for taking us into this Court would have been the acceptance of the protective reservations that were made by the United States of America. Finally it remained, when those protective reservations were discussed, for a distinguished American to return here with something else and some substitute that altered the original reservations which had been adopted by this body, and it is they who have caused the delay and not the Senate of the United States. If our conservationists and Europe's scheming diplomats had been willing to accept the unreducible minimum of American protection, there would have been no delay. If Mr. Root had not at the instance of Sir Cecil Hurst manufactured something destroying our irreducible minimum of protection, there would have been no delay. At any moment, much as I would have regretted it, we would have been in this adjunct of the League of Nations. And that the Senate was right and they were endeavoring to do something else while assuming they were doing only what had been done is demonstrated by the resolution of ratification with its addenda, the celebrated fifth reservation, now presented to the Senate.

Mr. President, the World Court, the League of Nations tribunal, the sacrosanct tribunal for the preservation of peace throughout the world—we are to enter for what? For the determination of any American question? Not so, not so. Are we to enter it for the purpose of deciding any controversy that exists between our country and any other country? Not so, not so. Are we to enter it, sir, in order that we may preserve peace between European nations that now disregard and snap their fingers at that court? Not so, not so.

Why do we enter it? Not for America, not for our beloved Republic; we enter it to meddle and muddle, under an hysterical internationalism in those controversies that Europe has and that Europe never will be rid of. We enter it to do something that is foreign to our soil, foreign to our people, foreign to the genesis of our institutions, foreign to the very characteristics of our Republic. We enter it for that and that alone, and you may be just as certain of that in the beginning as at the end. We are going into the World Court, sir, not for America, not for the United States. We are going in, sir, for the benefit of the Hejaz of Arabia and for Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, for Italy, for France, for England, and for all those States that constitute at present the League of Nations in foreign lands. That is why we go into it. We go into it in the sacred name of peace, when there is no peace. We go into it because in stentorian tones gentlemen, weeping great salty tears, tell us that we must go in in order to preserve the world's peace. We preserve the world's peace! It is a beautiful thought; it is a marvelously naive expression that we, with all the nations of Europe save one, feeling toward us like a recalcitrant debtor ever feels toward a creditor, are to go among them to preserve peace among them, which they cannot preserve for themselves.

Where do they go if they want to preserve peace? Not to their League or their Court. Italy meets with France in secrecy for the determination of African boundaries and for the settlement of differences that may exist. If this Court is such a body as is represented to us, if it has the capacity for peace that is attributed to it, attributed only by Americans and by no one else, if it can solve the problems that now exist in European nations and throughout the world, why do not those people with their problems go to that Court for solution? Yet not one of them in the matter of peace or the preservation of peace has ever used the Court or ever will. They will unite among themselves and do just exactly as they ever seek to do, and, doing that, they take us into their particular organizations; that if trouble arises we may bear the brunt, go forward and lead the way in matters which do not concern us and then pay the meddler's price.

For peace go into the League! What peace do you mean? Do you mean that we are going to take up the question of France bombarding Syria? Oh, no; we will stand aside and wink and blink and have naught to do with such a dreadful thing by such a great power. Will we deal with the Egyptian question, with the Egyptians knocking at the door for many, many months in the effort to take up their matters of difference with Britain? Oh, no; Britain is too powerful and too great for us for a single instant to touch such a subject unless Britain desires. Are we going to deal with Mussolini, who blowing up Corfu only a few years ago, laughed at the Court and laughed at the League? Are we going to stop him now in matters concerning Abyssinia, where he is to be given a free hand by France? No; we will do nothing of the sort, and none of them, although the League and Court are theirs, will brook the slightest interference from their own creations.

Are we going to take up the question of Japan's invasion of Manchuria and her rape of China? Are we going to attempt to deal with what Japan has done in tearing up the nine-power treaty and violating every treaty of peace into which she has entered? Oh, no; our Secretary of State prior to the present one tried that. He tried it when he was told by some of those great nations abroad to take the lead. He buckled on the sword and marched ahead, and when he had marched a short time he looked around to see those who had induced him to march, but they had vanished, and he had nothing to do but to turn and retrace his steps and unbuckle his sword, and the matter rests today just exactly in the sweet will of Japan.
